BRETT FAVRE

As Brett Favre choked back the tears in the early part of the news conference when he made his retirement official, fans got one more sense of who the man is. The biggest story of the NFL offseason is one of its most humble players. One of its brightest stars, and yet a man who has stayed true to his small-town roots, Brett Favre did no cheerleading for himself.

In talking about the franchise that was his home for 16 years. "I hope every penny they spent on me they know was money well spent," he said while nearly choking on his words. "It was never about the money or the fame or the records. I hear people talk about your accomplishments. It was never my accomplishments. It was our accomplishments."

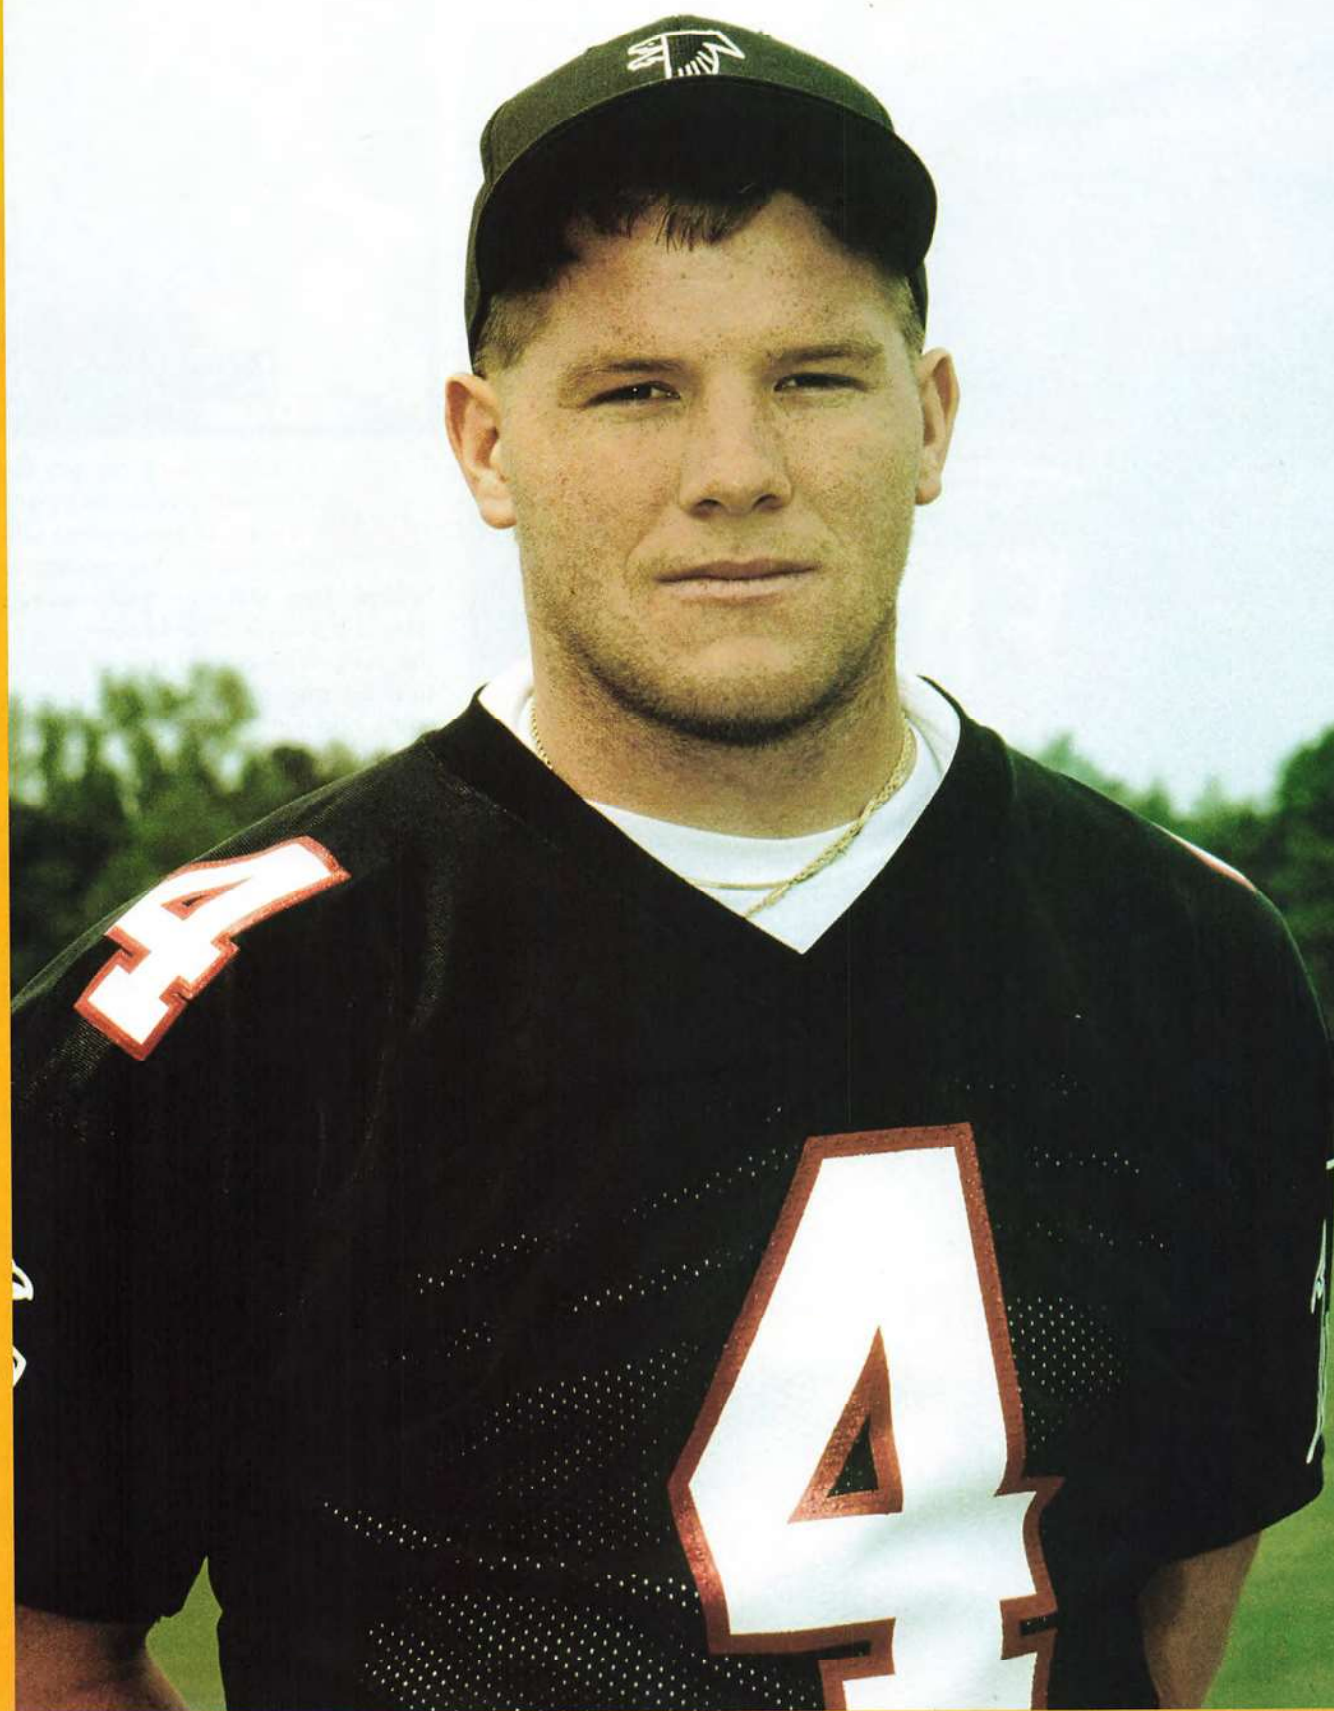

That humility is rare in the me-first world of sports today, and is one of the reasons that Favre will be forever immortalized. He's always been a bit of an underdog – a cast-off from Atlanta, playing in major sports' smallest market, battling personal tragedy, with a not-always-by-the-book approach to playing the position of quarterback. Still, Favre was a winner, a man beloved throughout the Midwest and across the country.

Even fans of some of Green Bay's most bitter rivals have to tip their caps to the man. The picture of longevity and leadership in the NFL, Favre is heading to Canton holding his head up high, and leaving on his own terms, and he did it all, his way.

BRETT FAVRE

A coach's son and a man from humble roots, Brett Favre has never sung his own praises to the press. While observers commended him for his leadership and unparalleled success, Favre has remained the same person he became while growing up in Kiln, Mississippi – competitive and yet humble through it all.

Favre played several sports growing up, but starred at quarterback in high school playing under his father. Still, the run-oriented offense Irvin Favre preached gave Favre little chance to showcase his arm.

Scouts were not exactly raving as Favre started his college career at Southern Mississippi: he was buried on the depth chart. Favre got his first chance to start in week three against Tulane and quickly showed his coaches that he was for real: Favre threw a pair of touchdown passes, led the Golden Eagles to a win, and solidified his starting position.

September 2nd, 1989 saw the Golden Eagles play their toughest opponent of the Favre era – Bobby Bowden's sixth ranked Florida State Seminoles. With the game tight in the fourth quarter, Favre would engineer some late game heroics. Marching Southern Miss down the field, Favre engineered a 6+ minute drive that culminated in a touchdown with 23 seconds left to give the Golden Eagles a marquee victory and give Favre the defining moment of his college career.

The 1989 season was Favre's best collegiate year. Although he was not a top candidate and played at a small school, he earned several Heisman Trophy votes. He did not directly challenge for the honor, but his strong showing in the voting seemed to foreshadow big things for the 1990 season.

Weeks before his senior year started, however, Favre's career and life were nearly ended in a car crash. Less than a mile from his parent's house, Favre lost control of his car which proceeded to flip three times before coming to rest against a tree. Favre would suffer internal injuries and lose nearly three feet of his small intestine in surgery, but emerged ready for football.

It looked like the quick recovery was all he needed when he wowed fans and scouts in September in a come from behind win over perennial powerhouse Alabama. The rest of the season would not go according to plan; Favre was clearly not the same quarterback he had been before the accident. For Brett Favre, it would have to be the merits of his junior season and his rocket arm that carried him to the NFL.

After the car crash and subsequent weaker senior season, Favre was written off by many in the NFL, but a few executives including New York Jets GM Ron Wolf believed in him. Wolf would be instrumental in moving Favre to Green Bay and keeping him there. In April of 1991, however, he was simply a man who believed in Favre but who lost out on drafting the quarterback to the Atlanta Falcons.

The 1991 season would be one of frustration and disappointment for Favre. Chris Miller was firmly entrenched as the Atlanta starter while enjoying a career year and head coach Jerry Glanville immediately disliked his second round draft pick, telling the media it would take a plane crash to get him to start Favre.

Favre only appeared twice in the 1991 season and threw a touchdown on his first pass – an interception that went the other way for six points. As his first season drew to a close, it looked like Brett Favre would struggle to become a career backup in the NFL.

Wolf still maintained an interest in Favre and during the 1991 offseason he became the general manager of the Green Bay Packers. The Packers had a quarterback already in Don Majkowski, but he was starting to show signs of breaking down. Still, Majkowski had led the NFL in passing yards just two years before, so most were surprised when Wolf offered the Atlanta Falcons the Packers' first-round draft pick for Brett Favre.

1992 again began with Favre holding the clipboard on the sidelines, but he would be in the lineup by week two. With Majkowski struggling against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Packers head coach Mike Holmgren decided to see what the young Favre could do. Favre's first pass in Green Bay was only slightly better than his first in Atlanta – it was deflected back to Favre who caught the ball and was immediately dropped to the turf for a seven yard loss.

Holmgren called on Favre again the next week when Majkowski went down and when the dust settled the Packers had come from behind to beat the Bengals, with Favre throwing the winning pass with just 13 seconds left. Despite Favre's struggles, Holmgren named him the starter for the next game against the Pittsburgh Steelers and no man would replace Favre in the lineup for the rest of his career.

After the controversial trade for a first-round draft pick that brought him to Green Bay, Favre made his regular-season Packers debut when he mopped up in 21-3 loss at Tampa Bay in Week Two. He oddly completed his first NFL pass to himself, catching a deflected pass for a 7-yard loss.

Favre was ready to break out after coming off the bench in a Week Two loss in Tampa, and he would get his next opportunity just a week later. Favre burst onto the scene on Sept. 20, 1992, when he came on in relief of Don Majkowski, who injured an ankle. He rallied the Packers to a 24-23 victory over the Bengals at Lambeau Field, throwing a 35-yard TD pass to Kitrick Taylor with just 13 seconds left.

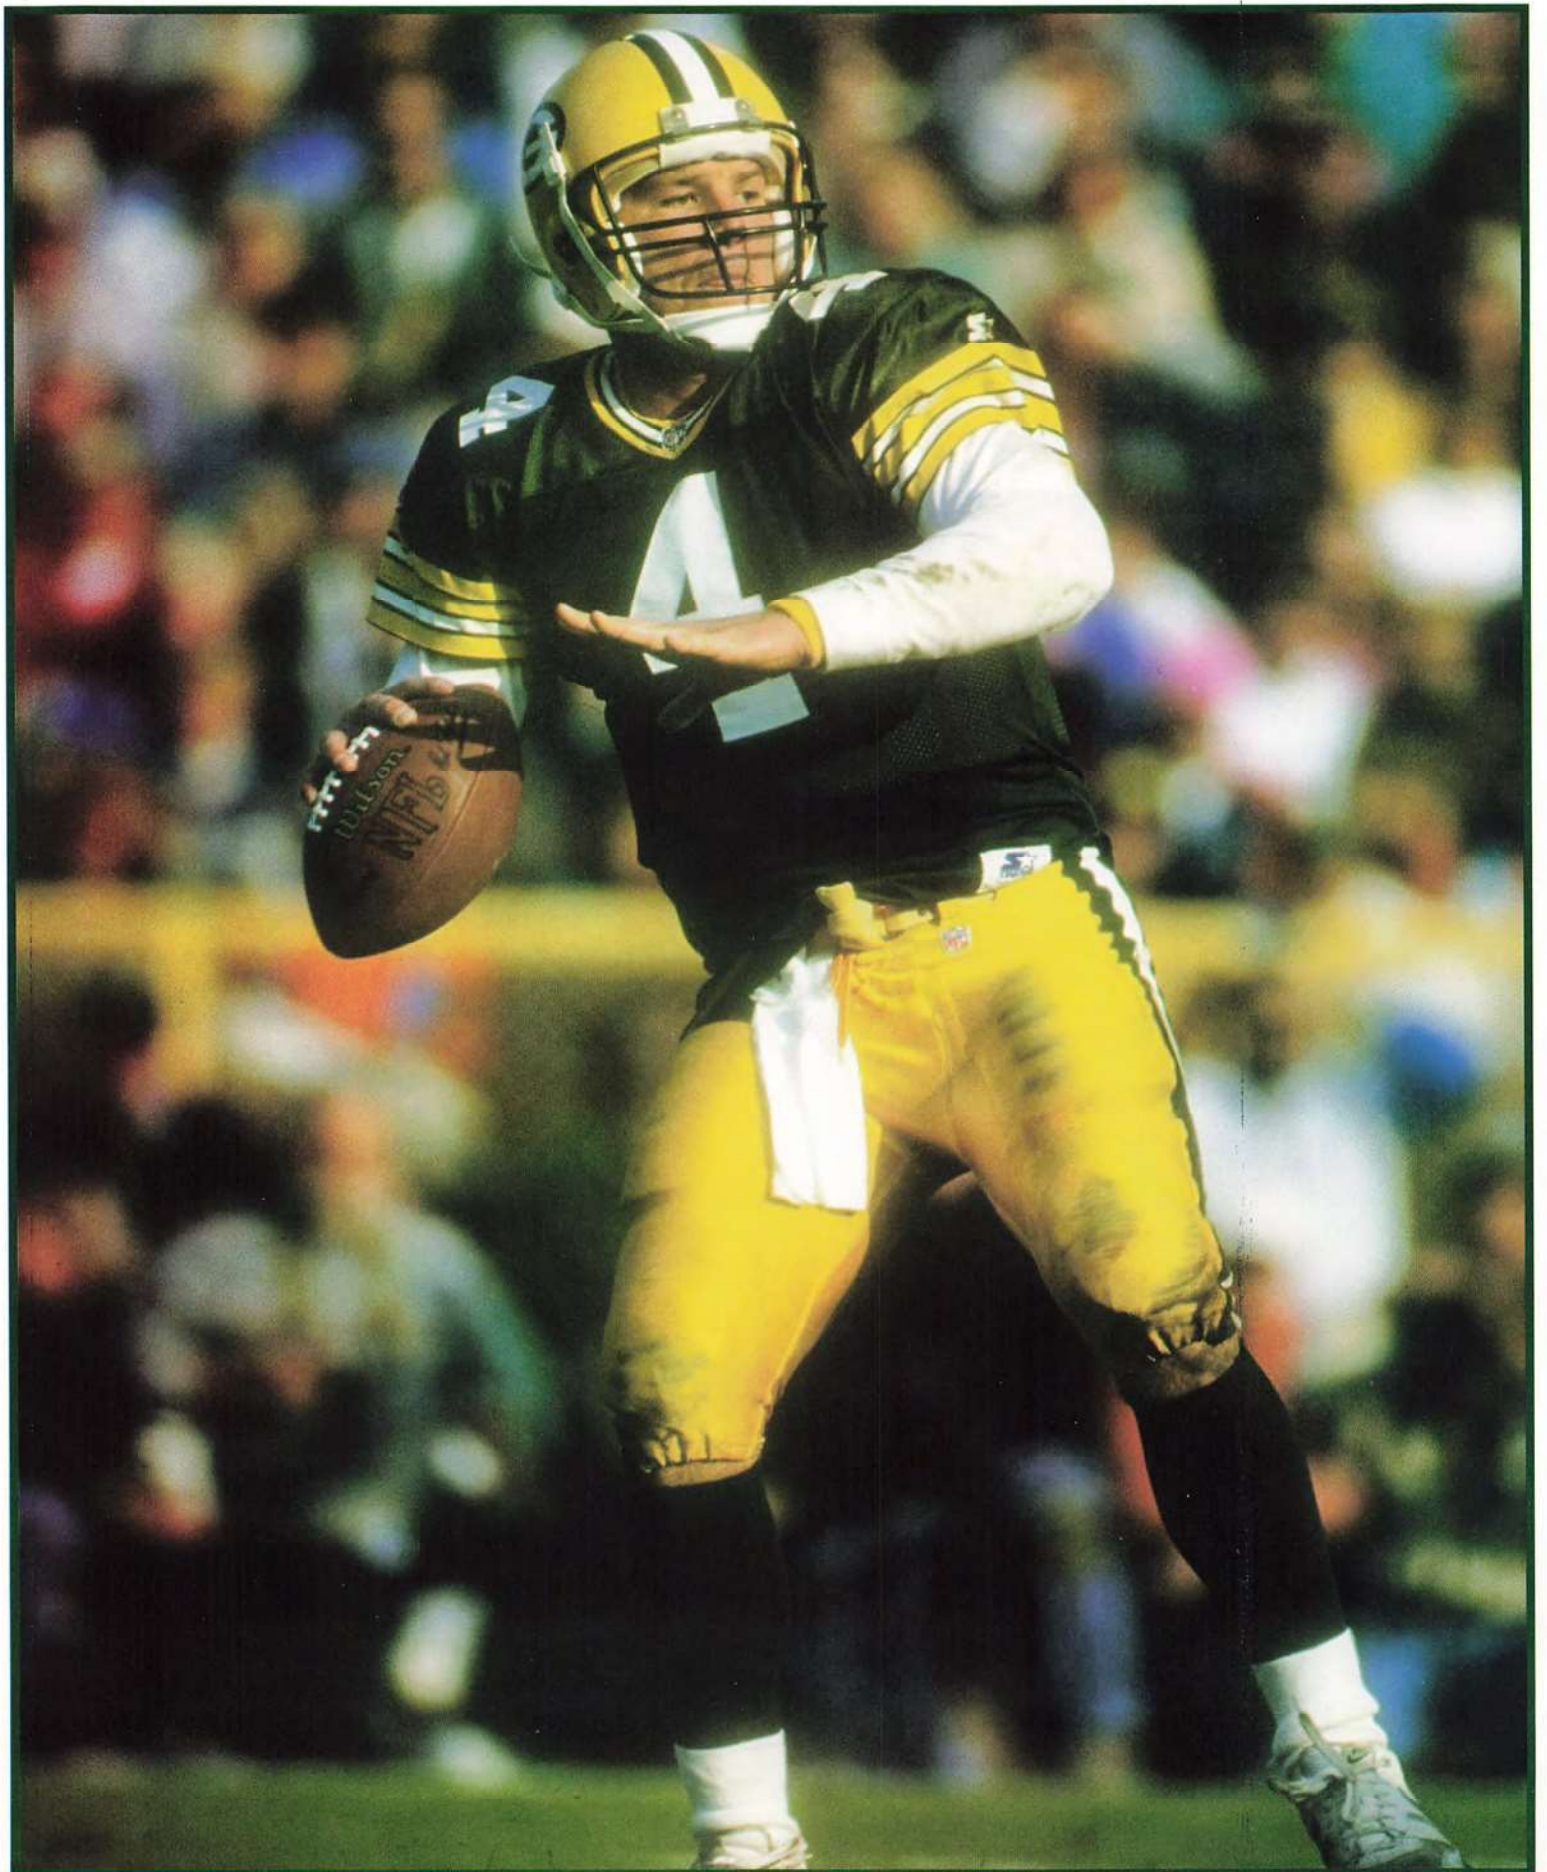

The next week, he started the first game of a streak that would become the NFL's longevity standard-bearer, a 17-3 win over the Pittsburgh Steelers at Lambeau Field. He showed some of the guts that would become the hallmark of his career against the Philadelphia Eagles, leading the Packers to a come-from-behind win in Milwaukee despite having a separated shoulder. He so impressed Eagles defensive end Reggie White, that White cited Favre's courage as one of the reasons he became a Packer.

The Packers' lone bright spot in Week 17 was Sterling Sharpe's six catches, giving him 108 for the season, good enough to break the NFL's single-season reception record of 106 set by Art Monk in 1984.

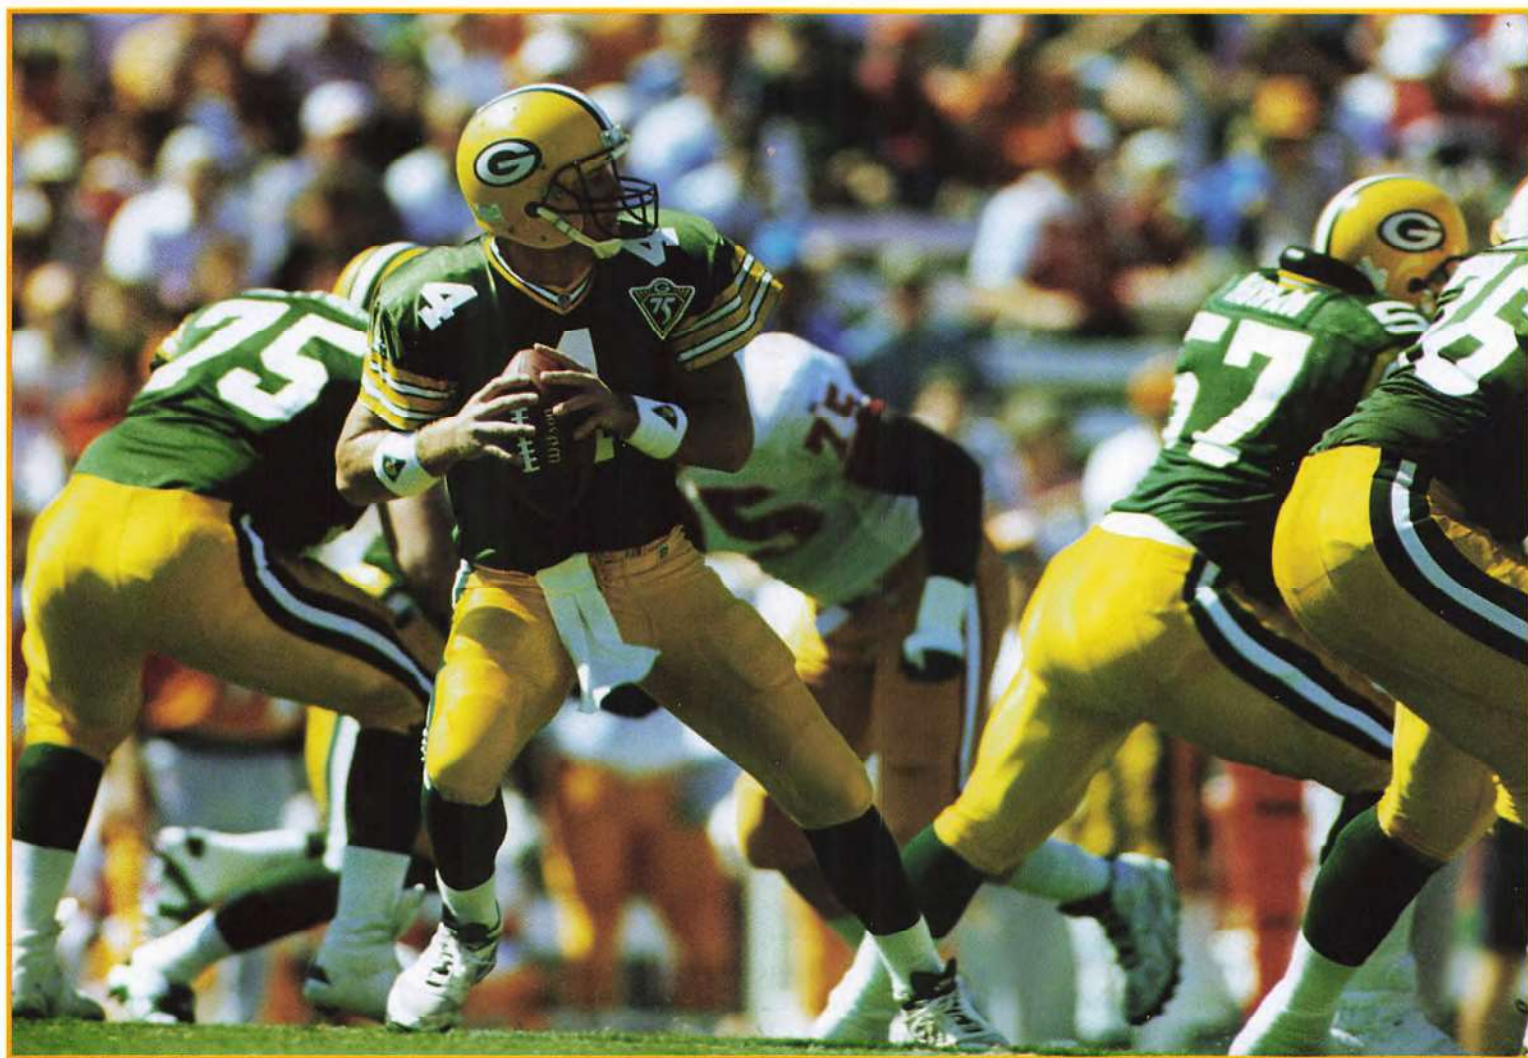

Favre completed 23 of 35 passes for 187 yards. He was sacked five times. He threw three interceptions; all were the result of poor decisions. Still, Favre was named to his first Pro Bowl. He appeared in the game as a reserve. Along the way, he set team records with a 64.12 passing percentage and 11 games of 200 yards passing.

The Packers started the season strong with a 36-6 win over the Los Angeles Rams. The Rams finished with just 53 yards rushing, and Bryce Paup and George Koonce were able to record a safety on one play. Rams quarterback Jim Everett completed 17 of 41 passes for 175 yards and two interceptions.

The offense recorded 381 total yards, scoring in six of eight possessions. Brett Favre completed 19 of 29 passes for 264 yards and two touchdowns. On one of the touchdowns, Favre completed a 50-yard touchdown pass to Sterling Sharpe, who finished with seven catches for 120 yards.

After the strong start against the Rams, the Packers lost the following three games. The first came in a 20-17 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles at Lambeau Field. Despite gaining a 17-7 lead in the third quarter, the Packers only managed 159 yards of total offense in the game. Starting linebacker Brian Noble left the field with a season ending injury as the Eagles were able to rally from behind. The Eagles gained the lead with under five minutes to play when Randall Cunningham escaped a sack from former team-mate Reggie White and fired a 40-yard touchdown pass to receiver Victor Bailey.

BRETT FAVRE

Following a bye-week, the Packers traveled to the Metrodome to play the Minnesota Vikings. The Packers again fell short of victory in the closing seconds of the game. The Packers were leading 13-12 before Jim McMahon completed a 45-yard pass on third and ten to Eric Guliford, who was wide open. With four seconds left, Vikings kicker Fuad Reveiz completed his fifth field goal to give the Vikings a 15-13 victory. The following week, the Packers lost their third straight to defending Super Bowl champions, the Dallas Cowboys.

After losing three of their first four games, the Packers proceeded to win six of their next seven, defeating four conference opponents. The Packers won their second game of the season, narrowly defeating the Denver Broncos on Brett Favre's birthday. At halftime the Packers held a 30-7 lead, scoring on each of their first six possessions. Favre passed for 182 yards in the first half, including a 66-yard touchdown pass to Jackie Harris. John Stephens and Edgar Bennett each scored one-yard touchdown runs and Chris Jacke made three field goals. In the second half the Packers gained only 61 yards on offense. Favre threw three interceptions, including one which was returned for a touchdown.

Broncos quarterback John Elway completed 33 of 59 passes for 367 yards and a touchdown, helping to close the Packers' lead to 30-27. The Broncos had a chance to tie or win the game on their last drive, but came up short when Reggie White was able to sack John Elway twice. After the win the Packers had another bye week.

In week eight the Packers defeated the Tampa Bay Buccaneers 37-14, bringing their record to 3-3. Brett Favre completed 20 of 35 passes for 268 yards. Sterling Sharpe caught a career-high four touchdown passes, tying a Green Bay Packer record held by Don Hutson. The next week, they defeated the Chicago Bears 17-3 and forced seven sacks and three turnovers in the game.

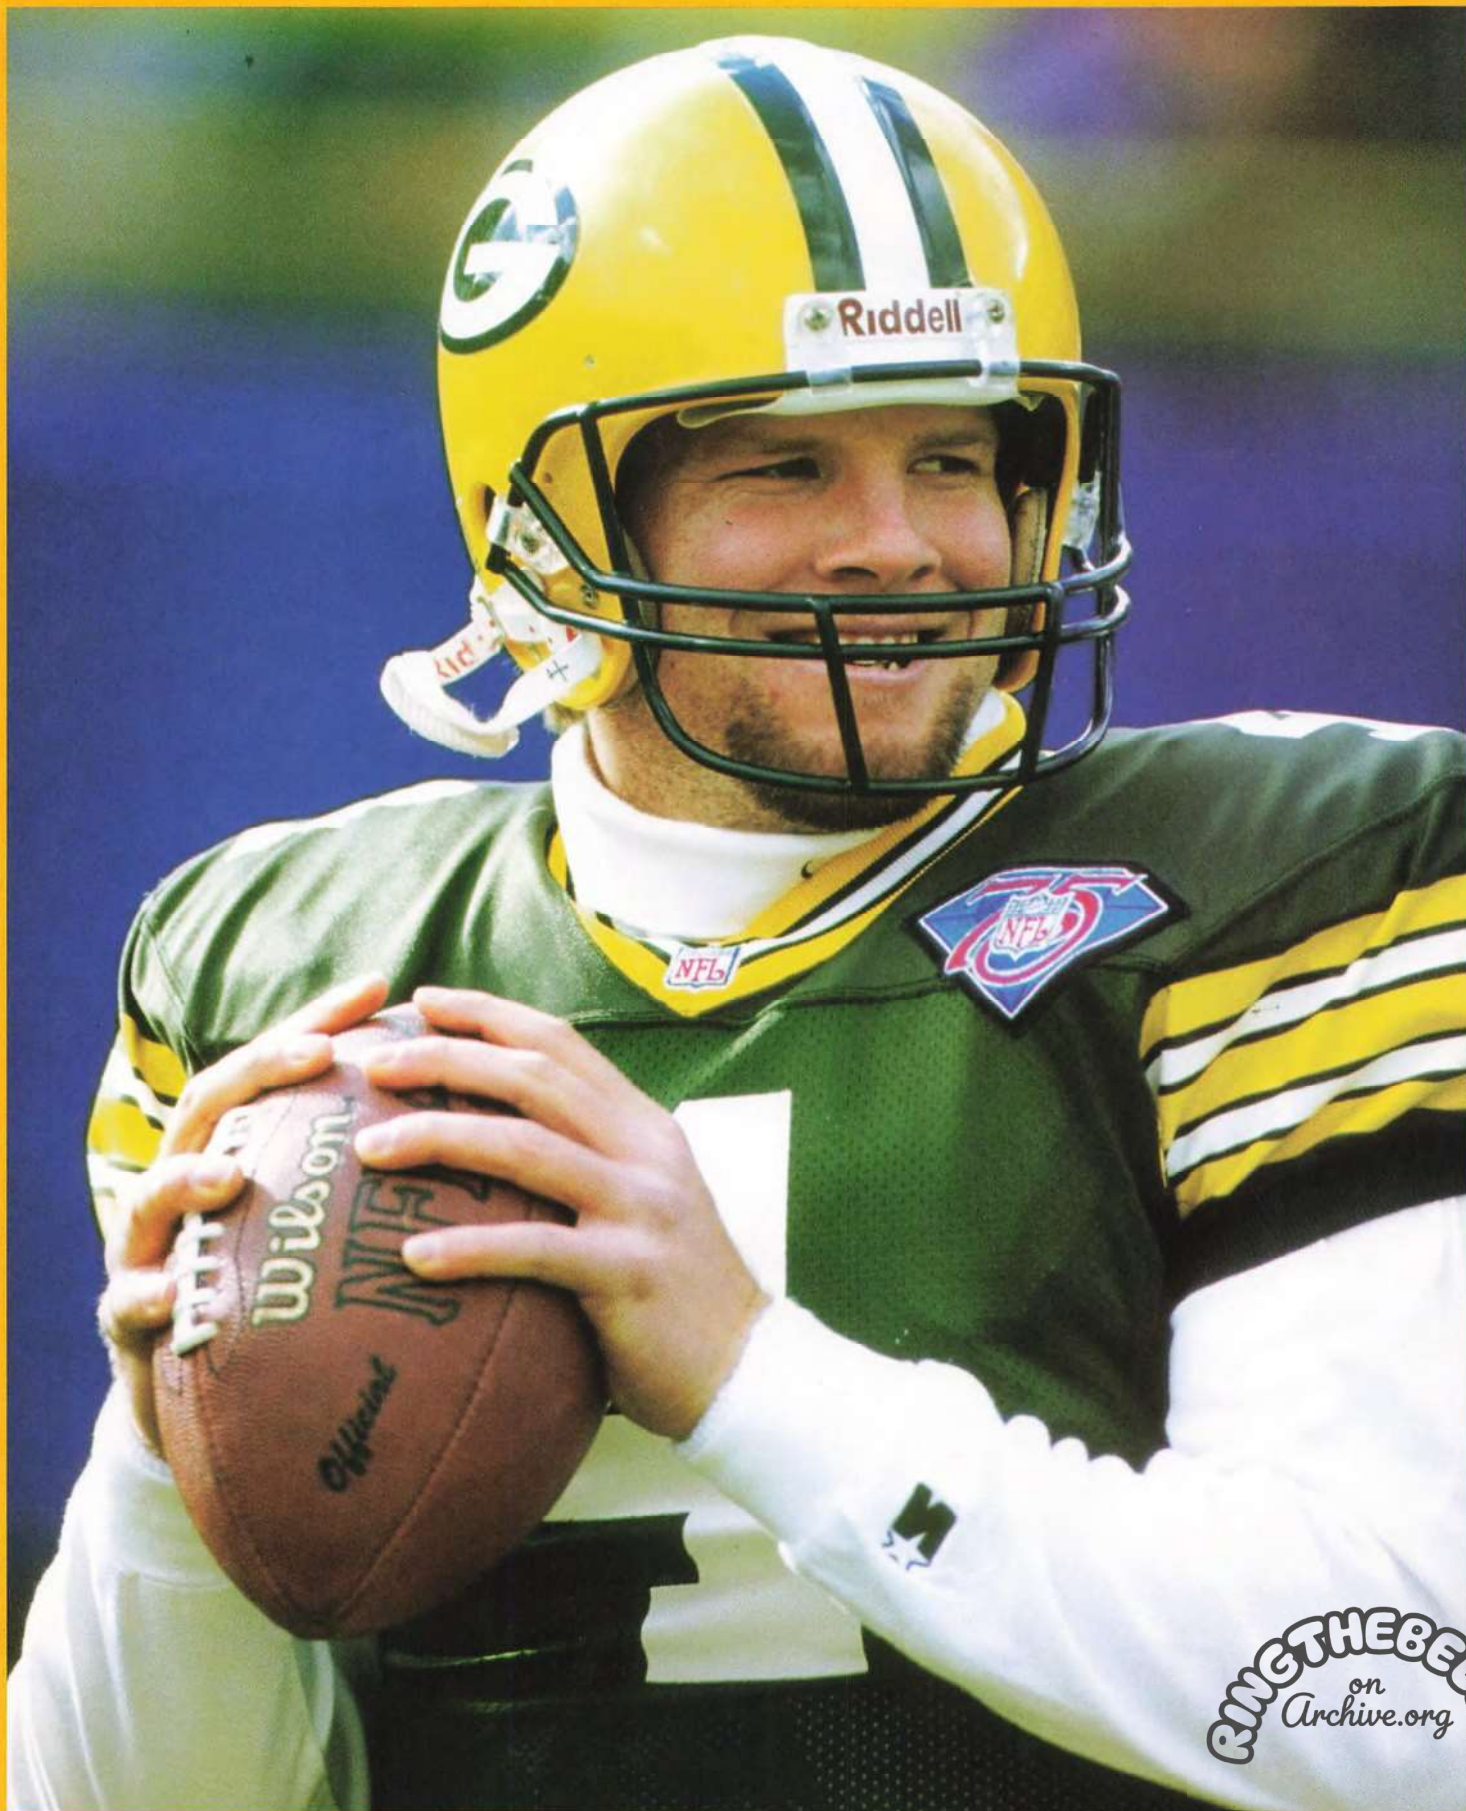

The Packers finished 9-7 in the regular season, good enough to earn a playoff berth in the tight NFC. Favre was again named to the Pro Bowl as he completed his first full season as the Green Bay starter.

In the playoffs, the Packers played in the NFC Wild Card game against the Detroit Lions. The Packers were able to win the game 28-24, closing with a forty-yard touchdown pass from Favre to Sterling Sharpe with 55 seconds left. The Packers bowed out the next week, 27-17 losers to the Dallas Cowboys.

In 1994, Brett Favre continued to establish himself as one of the best quarterbacks in the NFL by passing for 3,882 yards while throwing 33 TD passes. However, the Packers struggled with injuries, and sat at 6-7 needing to win their final 3 games to make the playoffs.

As Sterling Sharpe struggled with a neck injury that would eventually claim his career, the Packers forged ahead and stayed alive in the playoff drive by beating the archrival Chicago Bears at Lambeau Field 40-3. One week later the Packers would end a 61-year tradition by playing their final game in Milwaukee. Needing to win this contest as well, the Packers came through beating the Atlanta Falcons 21-17. The game was the Packers third of the season at venerable County Stadium, and starting the next year, all home games would be played at Lambeau Field. Today, enjoying Packers games in Milwaukee is an impossibility, as Miller Park has no facilities for being converted for use as a football stadium.

The Packers would go on to win their final game of the season against the Buccaneers in Tampa Bay to finish with a 9-7 record to qualify for the playoffs for another season. In the Wild Card round the Packers hosted the Detroit Lions at Lambeau Field. The Packers would have to play the game without Sterling Sharpe who, by this time, had realized the extent of his neck injury and was no longer playing. Sadly, he would not appear in another NFL game.

The Packers used running back Dorsey Levens to control the ball for 37 minutes as the Packers won 16-12 while holding Lions RB Barry Sanders to minus one yard rushing to advance to the Divisional round of the NFC playoffs. However, a week later the Packers season would end in Dallas with a crushing 35-9 loss to the Cowboys.

Still, 1994 showed that the Packers were not a fly-by-night team, and that they were ready to compete with the best the NFC had to offer. With Favre already seen as one of the premier quarterbacks in the NFL, most saw big things ahead.

Still, with the loss of Sterling Sharpe most thought that Brett Favre would be in trouble. Sharpe had proven himself as a quality target for Favre, and the sure-handed receiver would be much missed in the Packers receiving corps. However, Favre proved that he was the best quarterback in the NFL by passing for 4,413 yards while throwing 38 TD passes, which was good enough to win the NFL Most Valuable Player award, the first of three he would win in his career.

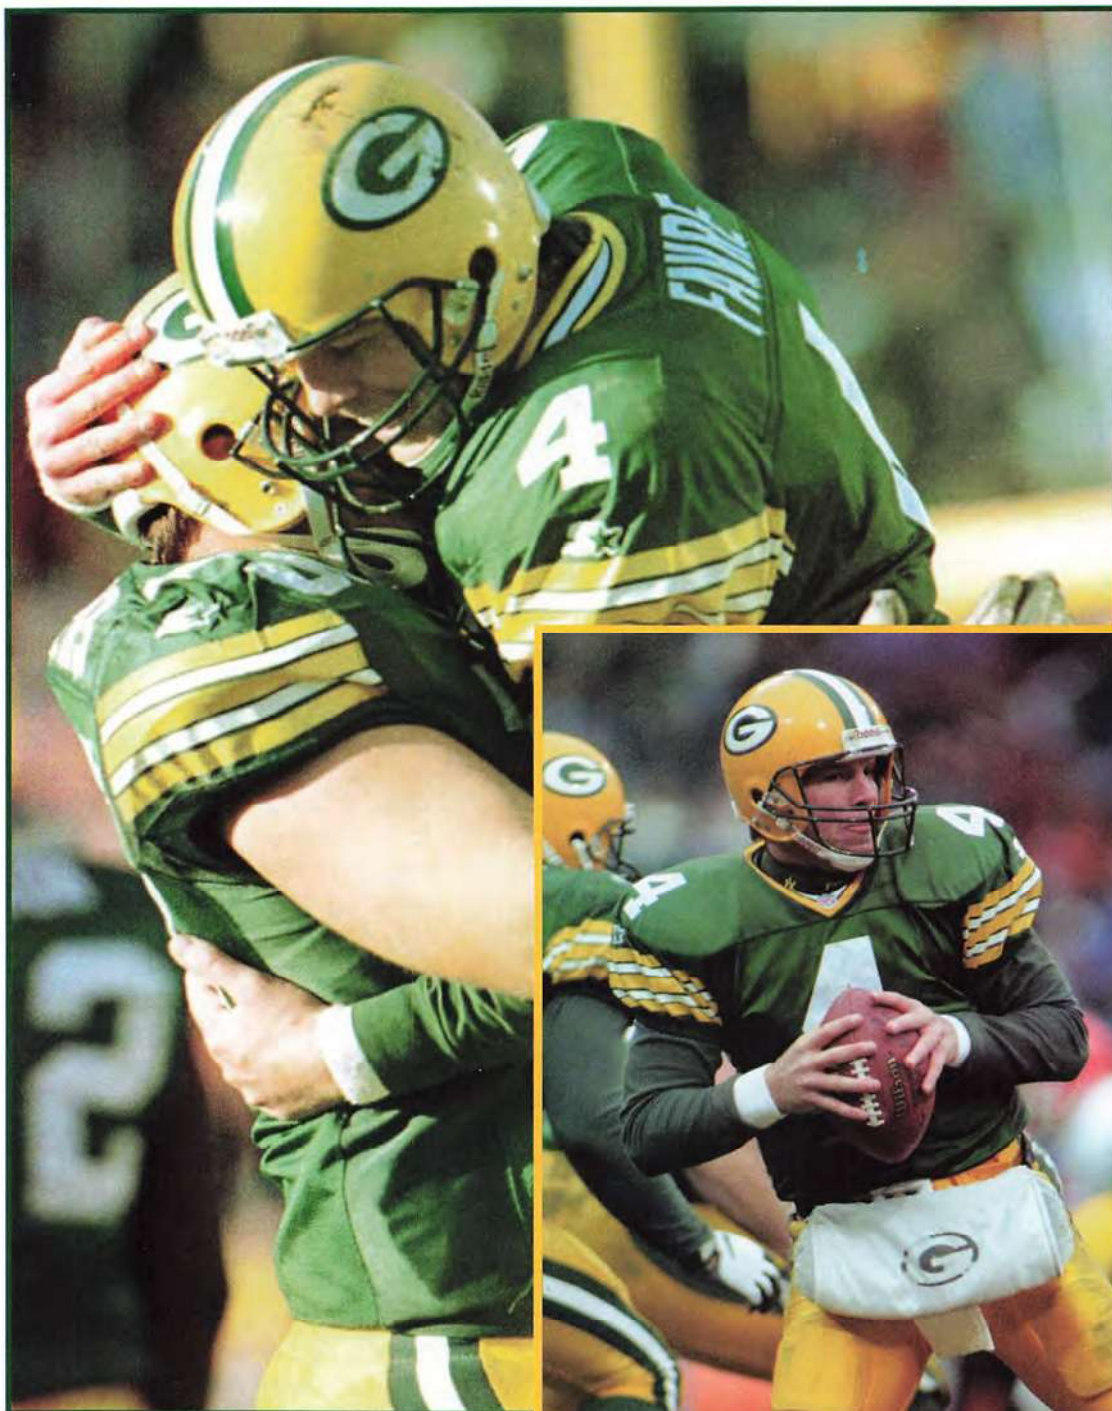

Favre's MVP season was good enough to bring the Packers their first division championship in 23 years by finishing an impressive 11-5. Despite their record being much improved from previous seasons, the Packers could not earn a first round bye, and they would have to face the 6th seeded Atlanta Falcons.

After falling behind early at 7-0, the Packers offense and Favre caught fire and scored 27 points to take a 27-10 lead into halftime. The Packers would go on to win the game easily by a 37-20 count. Things were looking bright for the playoff run, however, if the Packers were going to take the next step, they needed to dethrone the defending Super Bowl champion 49ers in San Francisco just a week later.

The Packers sending a mes-

scored 14 unanswered points to win the game 38-28 and advance to Super Bowl XXX.

With their deepest run in the NFC playoffs yet, the Packers remained a force in the NFC Central. A Super Bowl title still eluded the Packers, but fans clamoring for a return to glory would have to wait just one more season to see their dreams realized. With Brett Favre running the show and Troy Aikman on the downswing of his career in Dallas despite the Super Bowl win, many thought that the Packers day to bask in the sun would soon be at hand.

sage to the NFL, jumped out to a 21-0 lead, and did not look back in beating the 49ers 27-17 to advance to the NFC Championship Game for the first time in 27 years. The NFC Championship Game would take place in Dallas where the Packers last two playoff runs had ended. The Packers and Cowboys battled back and forth for the first three quarters, and, as the fourth quarter opened, the Packers found themselves ahead by a 28-24 count. The Packers ended up running out of gas as the Cowboys

Almost from the point the 1995 season ended in Dallas, the Packers had only one goal in mind: Super Bowl XXXI, scheduled for the Superdome in New Orleans. The Packers would jump out to a phenomenal 8-2 start heading into a Monday Night match up with the hated Cowboys in Dallas.

The Packers hoped to send a message, but instead doubts rose about whether the team was ready for the big time as the Cowboys used an impressive seven field goals to beat the Pack 21-6. Doubt began to swirl that the Packers were simply meant to be bridesmaids for America's Team, but the squad was ready to rise up. The loss could have deflated the Packers, but instead it made them more determined, as they would win their final 5 games to finish with a 13-3 record. The impressive mark captured the NFC Central, and home field advantage, while Favre won his second straight MVP award.

In the Divisional Playoffs the Packers make quick work of the San Francisco 49ers beating them on a damp and soggy field 35-14, while fans anticipated a rematch with the Cowboys. However, the rematch never materialized as the Cowboys were knocked off by the second year Carolina Panthers.

The Panthers would give the Packers problems in the early going of the NFC title game, intercepting

Favre twice to take a 10-7 lead. However the Packers would respond with a 71-yard TD drive to take the lead 14-10. The Pack would add a FG just before halftime to get a seven point cushion. After the two teams traded field goals at the start of the third quarter, Favre hit Antonio Freeman with a 66-yard touchdown pass that gave the Packers a 27-13 lead to break the Panthers back. The Packers would advance to the Super Bowl with a 30-13 win.

In the Super Bowl, the Packers jumped out early and snagged a 10-0 lead. The New England Patriots struck back quickly and took a 14-10 lead heading into the second quarter. The Packers jumped back out in front right away as Brett Favre hit Antonio Freeman on an 81-yard touchdown pass, setting a new Super Bowl record.

The Packers would go on to take a 27-14 lead into halftime. The Patriots would cut the lead to 27-21 in the closing moments of the third quarter. On the ensuing kickoff, however, the Packers put the game away on a 99-yard kick return by Super Bowl MVP Desmond Howard. A two-point conversion gave the Packers a 35-21 lead they would not surrender. In the fourth quarter the Packers would smother the Patriots as Reggie White collected 3 sacks as the Packers held on to their 35-21 lead for the teams' third Super Bowl win.

SUPERBOWL XXXI

As the number one seed in the NFC playoffs, the Packers would not have to head to the road until the Super Bowl. The Divisional round welcomed the San Francisco 49ers to Green Bay after the Packers enjoyed their bye week. For the second straight year, the Packers would come out on top but this year a different opponent loomed in the NFC Championship. The upstart Carolina Panthers were only in their second year as a franchise, but had knocked off the Dallas Cowboys just a week earlier.

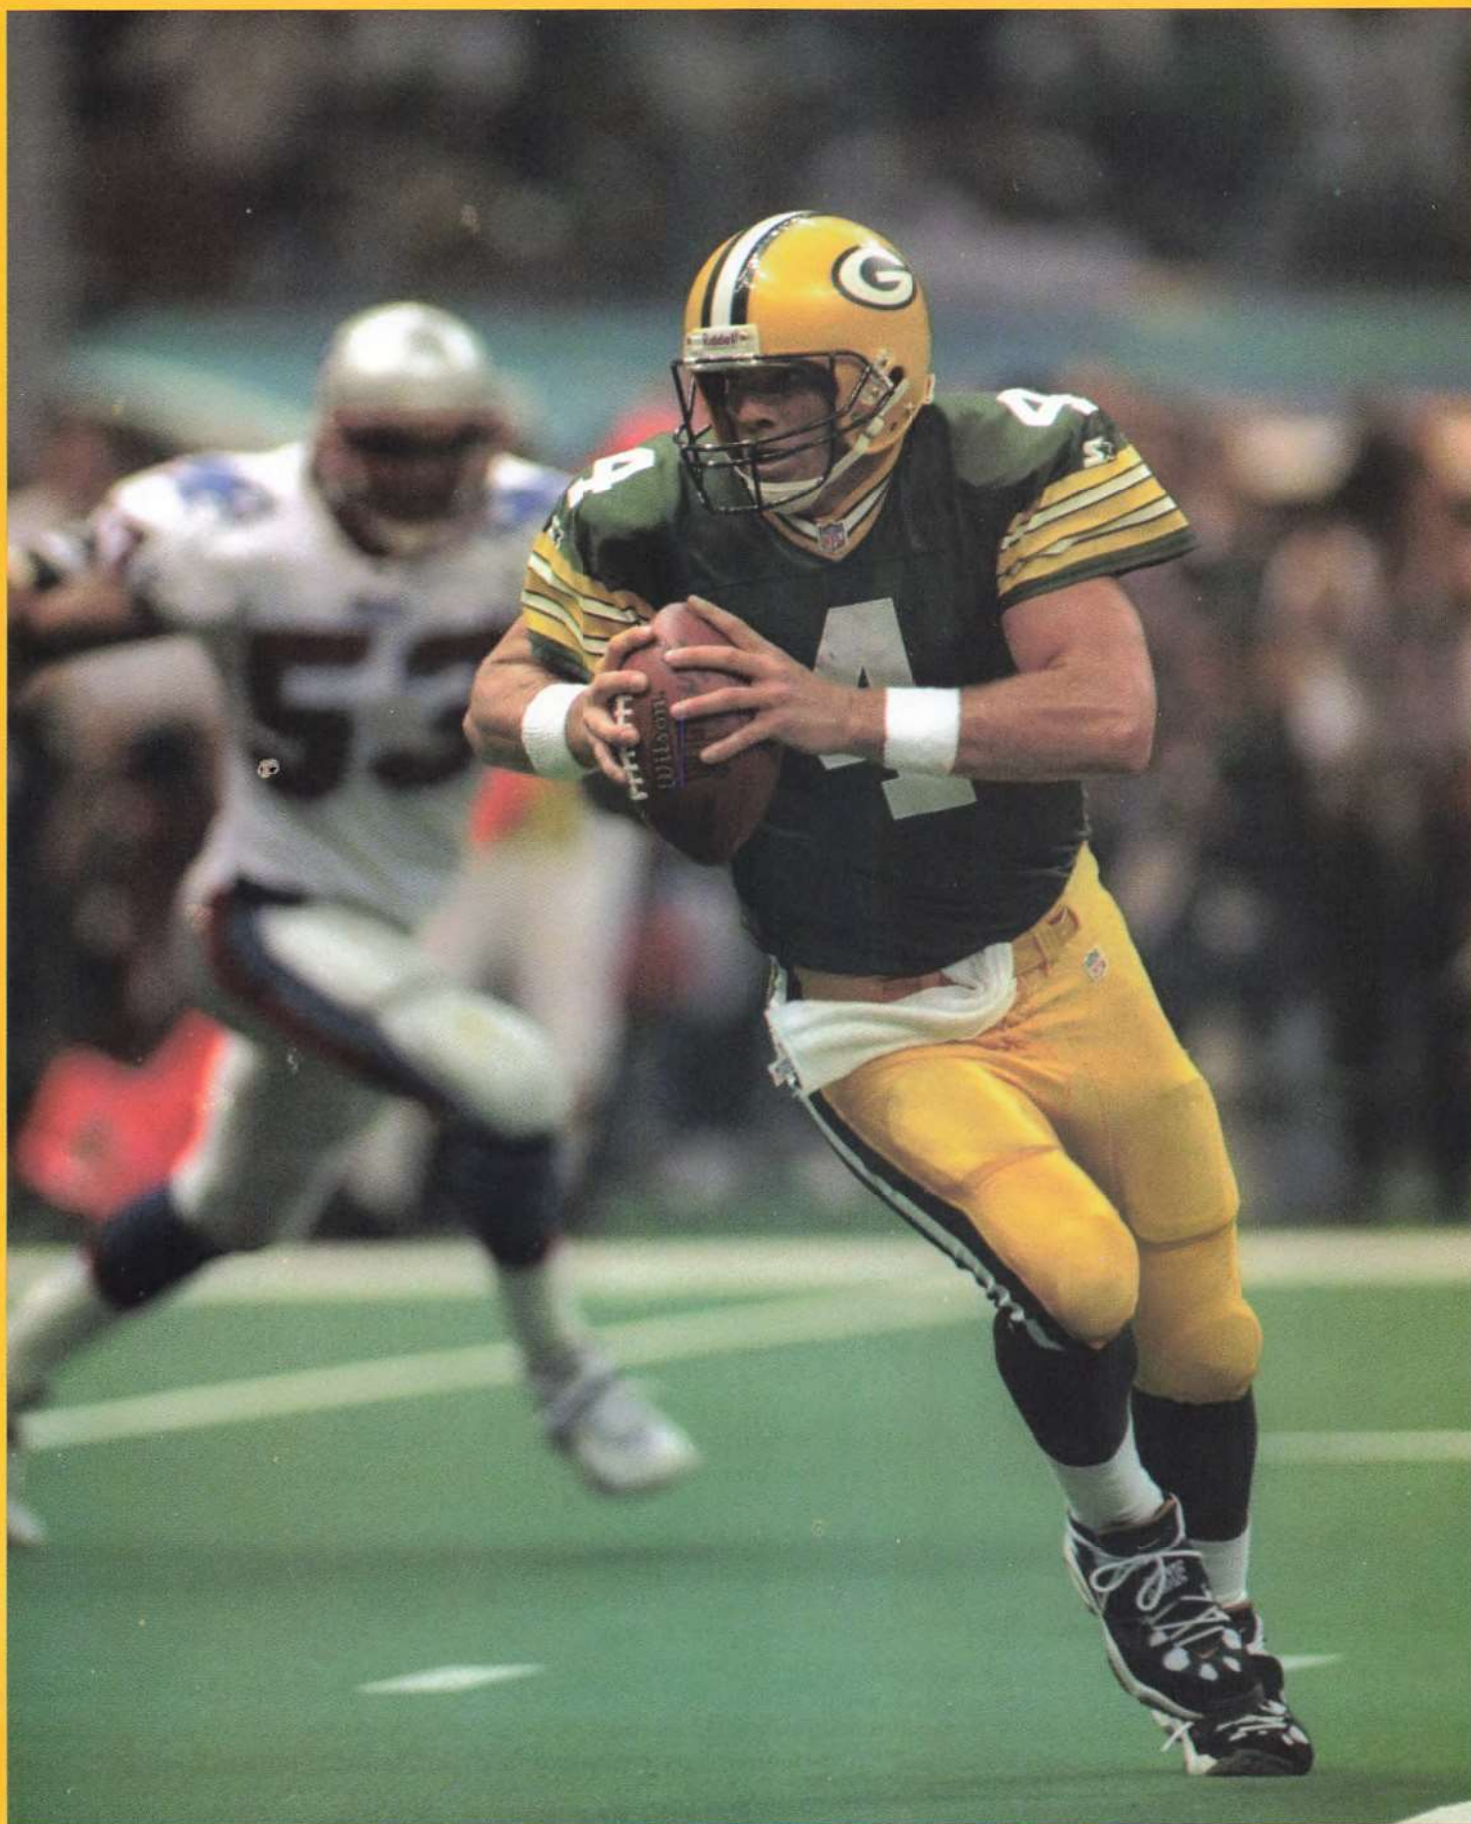

The weather, the fans, and the Packers proved to be too much for the Panthers, and they slinked home on the losing end of a 30-13 drubbing. For the first time in his career, Brett Favre was heading for the Super Bowl. For the team it was just as sweet: the Packers had not played in the big game since Lombardi led them to back-to-back wins in Super Bowls I and II.

Favre was very excited for his Super Bowl appearance. Not only did he have a chance to become an NFL champion, he had an opportunity to do it in front of a friendly audience at

New Orleans' Superdome. With his whole family and many friends coming to the game from Mississippi, Favre was eager to showcase his talent on football's biggest stage.

Bill Parcells' upstart New England Patriots came into the Super Bowl led by their own young gunslinger in Drew Bledsoe. The Patriots had been a non-factor in the NFL playoffs since being crushed in the Superdome by the Chicago Bears in Super Bowl XX, but Parcells had turned the franchise around.

Green Bay forced New England to punt on the opening possession of the game and started their first drive with great field position after receiver Desmond Howard returned the ball 32 yards –the first salvo of his big day. Green Bay opened up the scoring with Brett Favre's 54-yard touchdown pass to Andre Rison on their second offensive play of the game. The Packers defense followed with an interception and Chris Jacke kicked a field goal to put the Packers up 10-0.

New England stormed back, scoring touchdowns on each of their next 2 possessions to take a 14-10 lead after the first quarter. The Packers and Patriots combined for a total of 24 points, the most ever scored in the opening quarter of a Super Bowl.

New England's lead was short lived. After both teams exchanged punts, Favre threw a Super Bowl record 81-yard touchdown pass to receiver Antonio Freeman, putting the Packers back in the lead, 17-14. The Packers later got a field goal to increase the lead to 20-14.

Three plays after the ensuing kick-off, Packers defensive back Mike Prior intercepted a long pass that was intended for Patriots wide receiver Shawn Jefferson. After the turnover, the Packers went on a 9-play, 74-yard drive that took 5:59 off the clock and ended on Favre's 2-yard touchdown run to give Green Bay a 27-14 lead with just 1:11 left in the half.

The game moved into the third quarter and settled down for the opening series. Taking advantage of some excellent starting field position later in the third, New England drove 53 yards in 7 plays and scored on an 18-yard touchdown run by Martin to cut the Packers' lead 27-21.

On the ensuing kickoff, Howard returned the ball a Super Bowl record 99 yards for a touchdown on the longest play in Super Bowl history. Favre then completed a pass to tight end Mark Chmura for the successful two-point conversion, giving the Packers a 35-21 lead.

The score proved to be the last one of the contest as the defenses of both teams took over for the rest of the game. The Patriots limited the Packers to 3 punts and a missed 47-yard field goal attempt by Jacke. Green Bay did even better, not allowing New England to advance past their own 32 yard line. Furthermore, White sacked Bledsoe on back-to-back plays on the Patriots first drive after Howard's game-clinching touchdown return.

White then recorded a third sack late in the fourth quarter, while Bledsoe was also intercepted twice in the final period. The Packers dominated the Patriots on both sides of the ball, out-gaining New England 323 yards to 257 and intercepting Bledsoe four times.

With the Super Bowl victory complete, Favre and his teammates won the Vince Lombardi trophy for the first time since Lombardi himself had led the team to its final championship 29 years before.

1997

With all sights set on a return to the Super Bowl, the Packers easily won their third straight NFC Central Division championship with another 13-3 record, as Brett Favre won his 3rd consecutive MVP award by passing for 3,867 yards. The award marked the first time a player had won it three times consecutively, an NFL record.

The Divisional round of the playoffs marked a battle of the Bays as Green Bay hosted the Buccaneers from Tampa. The Packers would simply pull away late to advance to their third straight NFC Championship with a 27-7 win. But, to get back to the Super Bowl the Packers would have to win on the road in San Francisco.

From the opening kickoff it was clearly the Packers day as they jumped out to a 13-3 halftime lead on a sloppy field at Candlestick Park. After a scoreless third quarter, the Packers extended their lead to 16-3 on a Ryan Longwell field goal, effectively putting the game away. After the 49ers failed to score, the Packers took time off the clock and put the game away with a Dorsey Levens touchdown plunge. The 49ers would score a TD on the ensuing kickoff return but the Packers scooped up the onside kick and ran out the clock to advance to their fourth Super Bowl with a 23-10 win.

The Packers were looking for their fourth Super Bowl championship in San Diego. Standing in their way were John Elway and the Denver Broncos, a franchise trying to erase the demons of four Super Bowl trips without a win.

The two teams battled back and forth all game as the lead seesawed in the first half. The Packers would come out of the locker room at half-time trailing 17-14; but taking advantage of a Broncos fumble the Packers tied the game right away in the third. The Broncos would strike again before the quarter ended, taking a 24-17 lead into the fourth. The Packers responded quickly, tying the game early in the final period. The game would stay tied at 24 until the two minute warning when the Broncos took the lead on a touchdown plunge from the one yard line.

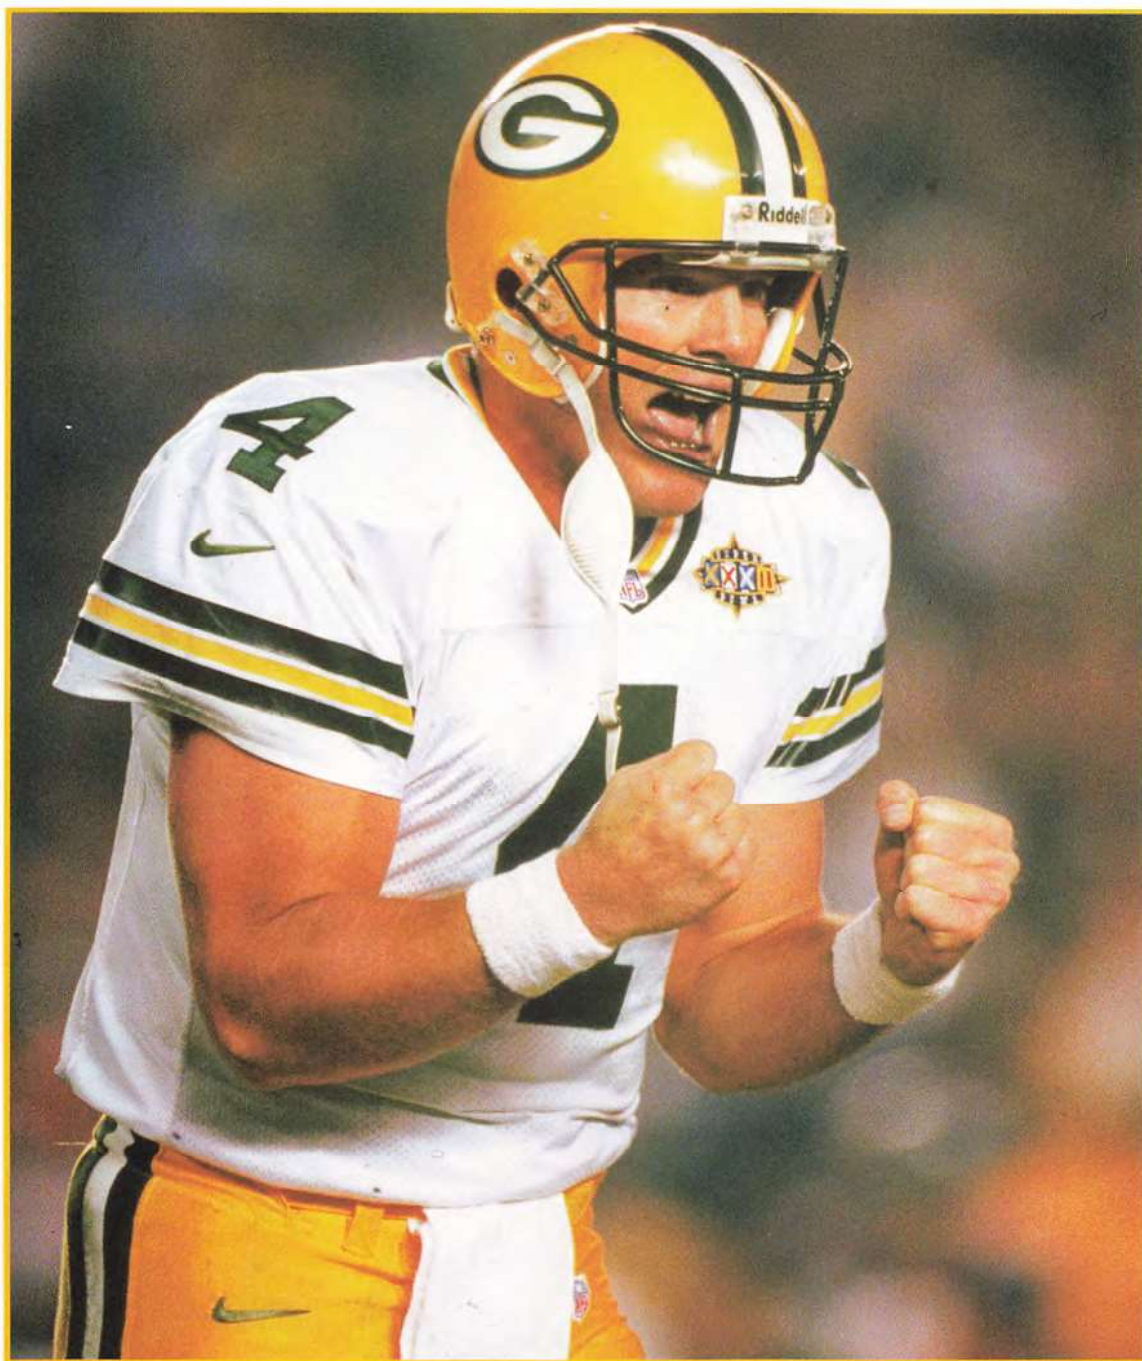

The Packers would take the ball and get into Broncos territory, but the Denver defense tightened up and knocked Robert Brooks down when he tried to catch a key third down pass. With 24 seconds left the Packers faced a do-or-die fourth down. Favre saw Mark Chumra wide open but his pass was deflected and crashed to the ground, killing the Packers hope for a second straight title. The win was the first for Broncos legend John Elway, who would succeed in repeating the next year.

The Packers looked to have shaken off the Super Bowl loss early in 1998, storming off to a 4-0 start as they extend their franchise record home winning streak to 25 games. The great start came to an end in Minnesota against the Vikings on a dreary Monday night. Still, hopes were high for another deep playoff run.

Brett Favre enjoyed yet another solid season in 1998. He eclipsed 4,000 yards for just the second time in his career, and in doing so tied his career high with a 63% completion rate. He hauled off and threw 31 touchdowns on the season, but his 23 interceptions were a career high at that point.

Favre even crossed out of the football world and into mainstream entertainment in 1998, stepping on to the big screen. He made his film debut in There's Something About Mary, playing the title character's ex-boyfriend. To many entertainment buffs that are not football fans, the role became Favre's most visible appearance. To some, he is still "that guy from There's Something About Mary."

The Packers quest for a fourth straight Central Division title would be hampered by key injuries to center Frank Winters and running back Dorsey Levens, among others. Despite the injuries and setbacks, the Packers would still make the playoffs with an impressive 11-5 record. They were shut out of the Central Division title by the upstart Minnesota Vikings, who were led by veteran Randall Cunningham and rookie Randy Moss. The Vikings took the NFL by storm, going 15-1 in the regular season before blowing a chance to win the NFC championship at home against the Atlanta Falcons.

In the Wild Card round the Packers would take on the 49ers in San Francisco once again. The game wobbled back and forth until the fourth quarter when the Packers grabbed a 27-23 lead. The home side struck back, however, and stunned the Packers when the Hall of Fame-bound Steve Young hit Terrell Owens with three seconds left in the game to give the 49ers a 30-27 win. The loss also marked the end of an era in Green Bay as coach Mike Holmgren opted out of his contract to take a job as the head coach and general manager of the Seattle Seahawks.

With Holmgren gone, Brett Favre had to play under just the third coach of his career and second in Green Bay during the 1999 season. Ray Rhodes was tapped to replace Holmgren, an interesting choice in that Rhodes had gone just 3-13 the season before as the head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles and had been fired following that campaign. Known for his odd tactics and strange motivational speeches, he had won the NFL's Coach of the Year award in 1995 after taking the Eagles to the playoffs, but he had a sub-.500 record as a head coach in the NFL.

Despite the questions, with Rhodes now holding the coaching reins the Packers got off to a 3-1 start, winning all three games in the final minute. The wheels began to come off, however, as the team lost four of their next five times out while Brett Favre played through a sprained thumb. Once he recovered, the Packers returned to their winning ways and looked to qualify for the playoffs yet again. Despite looking like they had a playoff berth sewn up with four games left, however, the Packers would drop their next three games to fall out of the playoff picture. They won in the final week to avoid having a losing record for the first time in the Favre era, finishing 8-8. Due to the NFL's complicated tiebreaking system, two teams with 8-8 records still made the playoffs, but the Packers knew heading into the final week that they were out of consideration.

Favre was back over 4,000 yards for the second straight season, but deeper into the numbers things weren't so impressive. For the first time since 1993 Favre finished with more interceptions than touchdowns, throwing just 22 scores while throwing 23 picks. He was sacked 35 times, one of the highest totals of his career.

Saying that the Packers lacked the toughness and fire he desired, general manager Ron Wolf relieved Rhodes of his head coaching duties the evening before the team's final game, also firing all of the assistant coaches including future head coach Mike McCarthy. It was the Packers only non-winning season between 1992 and 2004, a soft blemish on a spectacular run. The new head man had lasted less than one full season at the helm and Packers fans were left scratching their heads as to what lay ahead in the new millennium.

After the failure of outsider Ray Rhodes to continue the Packers winning ways, the team decided to return to an old formula to return the franchise to the top. Instead of looking for that days' hot assistant or former head man, they turned to Mike Holmgren's Seattle staff for help. While Holmgren himself would not be returning to Green Bay, assistant Mike Sherman did.

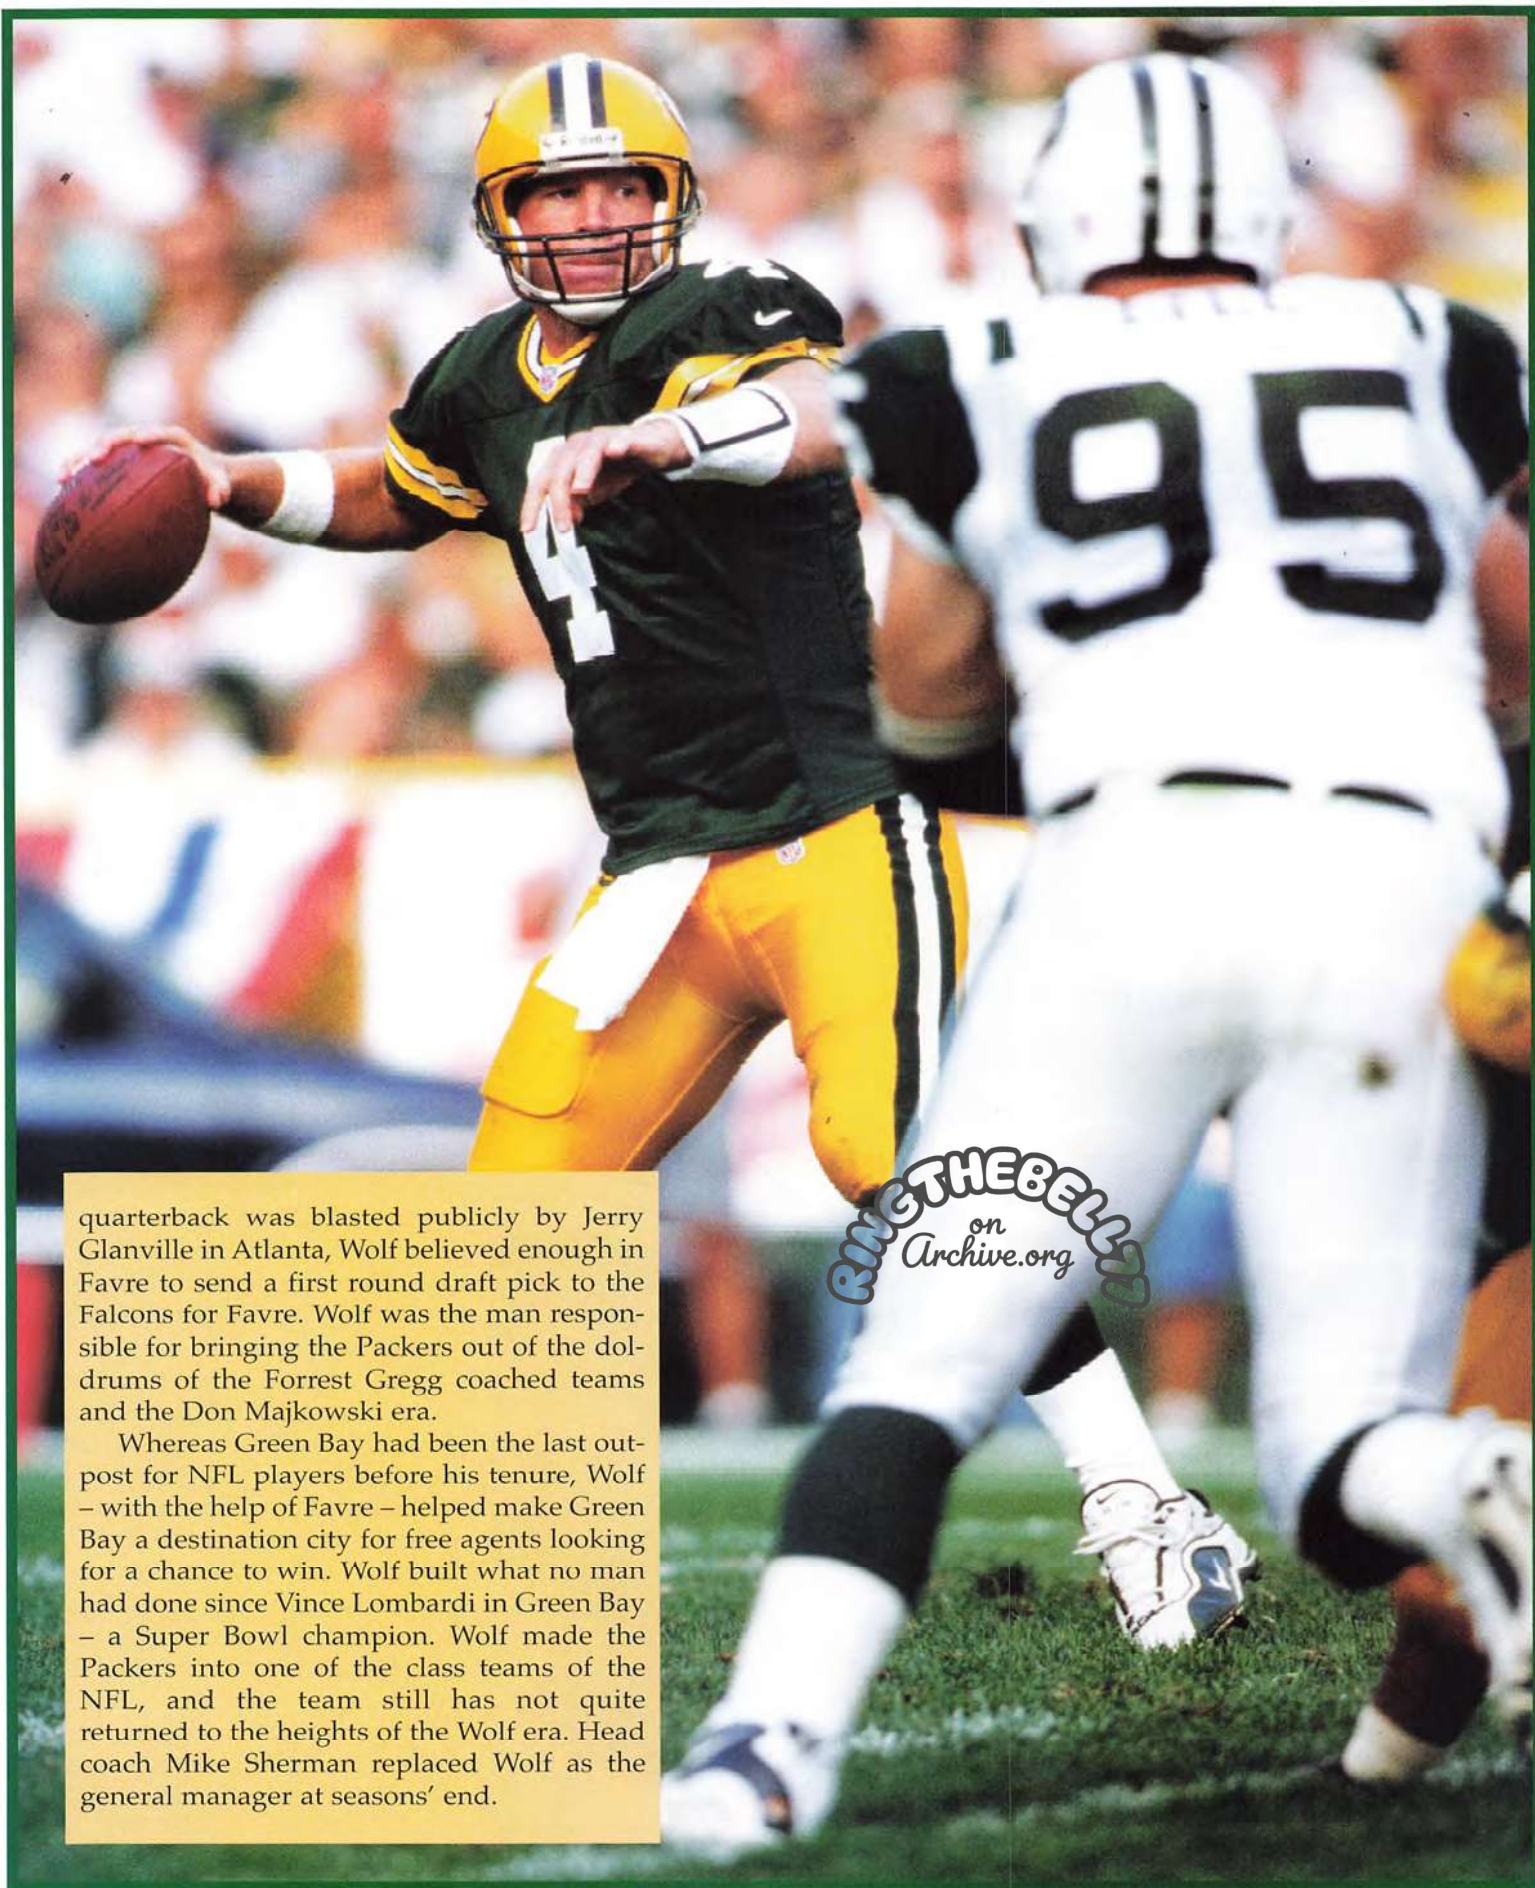

Even with the new-old attitude at the helm, the Packers struggled out of the gate and lost their first two games. They would go .500 over their next 10, and sat at 5-7, on the outside looking in at a playoff spot. Needing several losses ahead of them, the Packers did their part, winning their last four games to finish at 9-7. Even though they beat two playoff teams in that stretch, the drive towards the playoffs fell just short.

Favre had a quiet year, coming in well short of 4,000 yards. He only threw 20 touchdown passes on the season, but had a positive year in the interceptions department, being picked off only 16 times. Favre also finished with 108 positive rushing yards, the last time in his career that he would finish over 100.

After the season Ron Wolf decided to step aside and retire as Packers general manager. While a young executive with the Jets, he saw Brett Favre as a player who had a bright future in the NFL when very few others did. Even after the quarterback was blasted publicly by Jerry Glanville in Atlanta, Wolf believed enough in Favre to send a first round draft pick to the Falcons for Favre. Wolf was the man responsible for bringing the Packers out of the doldrums of the Forrest Gregg coached teams and the Don Majkowski era.

Whereas Green Bay had been the last outpost for NFL players before his tenure, Wolf – with the help of Favre – helped make Green Bay a destination city for free agents looking for a chance to win. Wolf built what no man had done since Vince Lombardi in Green Bay – a Super Bowl champion. Wolf made the Packers into one of the class teams of the NFL, and the team still has not quite returned to the heights of the Wolf era. Head coach Mike Sherman replaced Wolf as the general manager at seasons' end.

The Packers capitalized on their strong finish from the 2000 season by putting together a solid 12-4 record in 2001. While compiling their 12-4 mark, the Packers went 6-2 in the Central Division, including a sweep of the hated Chicago Bears. A first round bye was not in the cards, however, as bad losses to the Atlanta Falcons and Tennessee Titans prevented them from winning the division, an honor that went to the 13-3 Bears.

Brett Favre had one of his most consistent seasons in 2001, but fell less than 100 yards shy of the 4,000 mark. He tossed 32 touchdown passes, his most since 1997. He also completed over 60 percent of his passes for the first time since 1998, kicking off a string of five straight years he would be over that mark. He was only sacked 15 times, the fewest times he had hit the turf since his more mobile days in the mid-1990s. While his MVP days were long over, Favre remained one of the top quarterbacks in the NFL, a player any team would love to see in their colors. Even fans of the rival Chicago Bears commented that they would love to see him in the blue and orange.

In the Wild Card round, the Packers were matched up against a familiar foe in the San

BRETT FAVRE

San Francisco 49ers, this time at home at Lambeau Field. The visitors came out strong and held a 7-6 lead at halftime, but the Packers would come back in the second stanza to earn a 25-15 victory, staying undefeated at Lambeau Field in the postseason.

The next week, a trip to the tough

Edward Jones Dome in St. Louis loomed. For the past several years, the St. Louis Rams had been a force to be reckoned with in the NFC, winning a Super Bowl and wrecking havoc on opposing defenses. With their offense dubbed "The Greatest Show on Turf" and led by former MVP Kurt Warner, most fans expected an offensive shootout. It was the Rams defense that led the way, however, intercepting Favre six times en route to a 45-17 drubbing of the Packers. The Rams would go on to the Super Bowl, losing in the final seconds to the New England Patriots.

Trying to shake off the performance against St. Louis in the playoffs the previous year, the Packers came flying out of the gates by winning eight of their first nine games in 2002. The year would not be filled with much drama, as they had the newly established NFC North Division championship clinched by midseason, with their three division opponents on their way to losing 10 games or more each. Chicago, Minnesota and Detroit all struggled through the season, and while the Tampa Bay Buccaneers were on their way to a Super Bowl title, they were now exiled to the NFC South.

Once again Brett Favre would be the driving force for the Packers, passing for 3,658 yards while starting every game for the 11th straight season. He completed over 60% of his passes for the second straight year and, for the third year in a row, was sacked under 17 times. With his legendary status rapidly growing, Favre was honored by being the subject of an ESPN SportsCentury episode, highlighting his career accomplishments. He became one of the few athletes to have a special while his playing career was still going, a tremendous honor and recognition for all he had done.

After stumbling at the end of November with road losses to the Minnesota Vikings and Tampa Bay Buccaneers, the Packers appeared to be on the verge of securing home field advantage needing just a win over the New York Jets in the final game of the season. Perhaps coming into the game overconfident, the Packers were throttled 42-17.

Because of the loss, the Packers not only lost their home field advantage throughout the playoffs, they lost their first round bye week as well. In the playoffs, the Packers - who had a perfect regular season record at Lambeau Field - were stunned in the snow by the Atlanta Falcons 27-7. Not only was it a season-ending loss, it marked the first time in franchise history that the Packers lost a playoff game at Lambeau.

With Lambeau Field newly renovated, the Packers celebrated their historic home in the first week of the season with a re-dedication ceremony. The re-dedication, however, was spoiled as the Packers were beaten by the Minnesota Vikings by a 30-25 score. After rebounding with a big win over the Detroit Lions the following week, the Packers wilted in the desert heat losing to the Arizona Cardinals 20-13. Most of the first half of the season was a wash, and after seven games the Packers stood a mediocre 3-4.

Things could have gotten bleaker as Brett Favre suffered a broken thumb on his throwing hand, and suddenly his games started streak seemed in jeopardy. Ignoring the pain, Favre continued to play and he carried the Packers on his shoulders with a 30-27 win on the road over the Vikings. After a loss in the rain on Monday Night to the Philadelphia Eagles, Favre led the Packers to a key win on the road against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers keeping their playoff hopes alive at 5-5.

After splitting the next 2 games, the Packers were faced with the tall task of winning the rest of the way or missing the playoffs. After winning their next two, Favre was dealt more pain as his father died of a sudden heart attack the day before a key

Monday Night road game against the Oakland Raiders.

Not deterred by pain or heartache, Favre had one of the best games of his career passing for 399 yards in an impressive 41-7 win. In front of the large national audience, Favre showed his heart and soul to all who watched, turning in perhaps the most memorable game of his career.

Still, heading into the final game of the season the Packers needed to win and get some help to make the playoffs as NFC North champions after their wild card hopes were erased when the Cowboys lost to the New Orleans Saints. The Packers did their part, easily beating the Denver

Broncos 31-3, but had to look helplessly on as the Vikings were beating the hapless Cardinals 17-6 late in the fourth quarter.

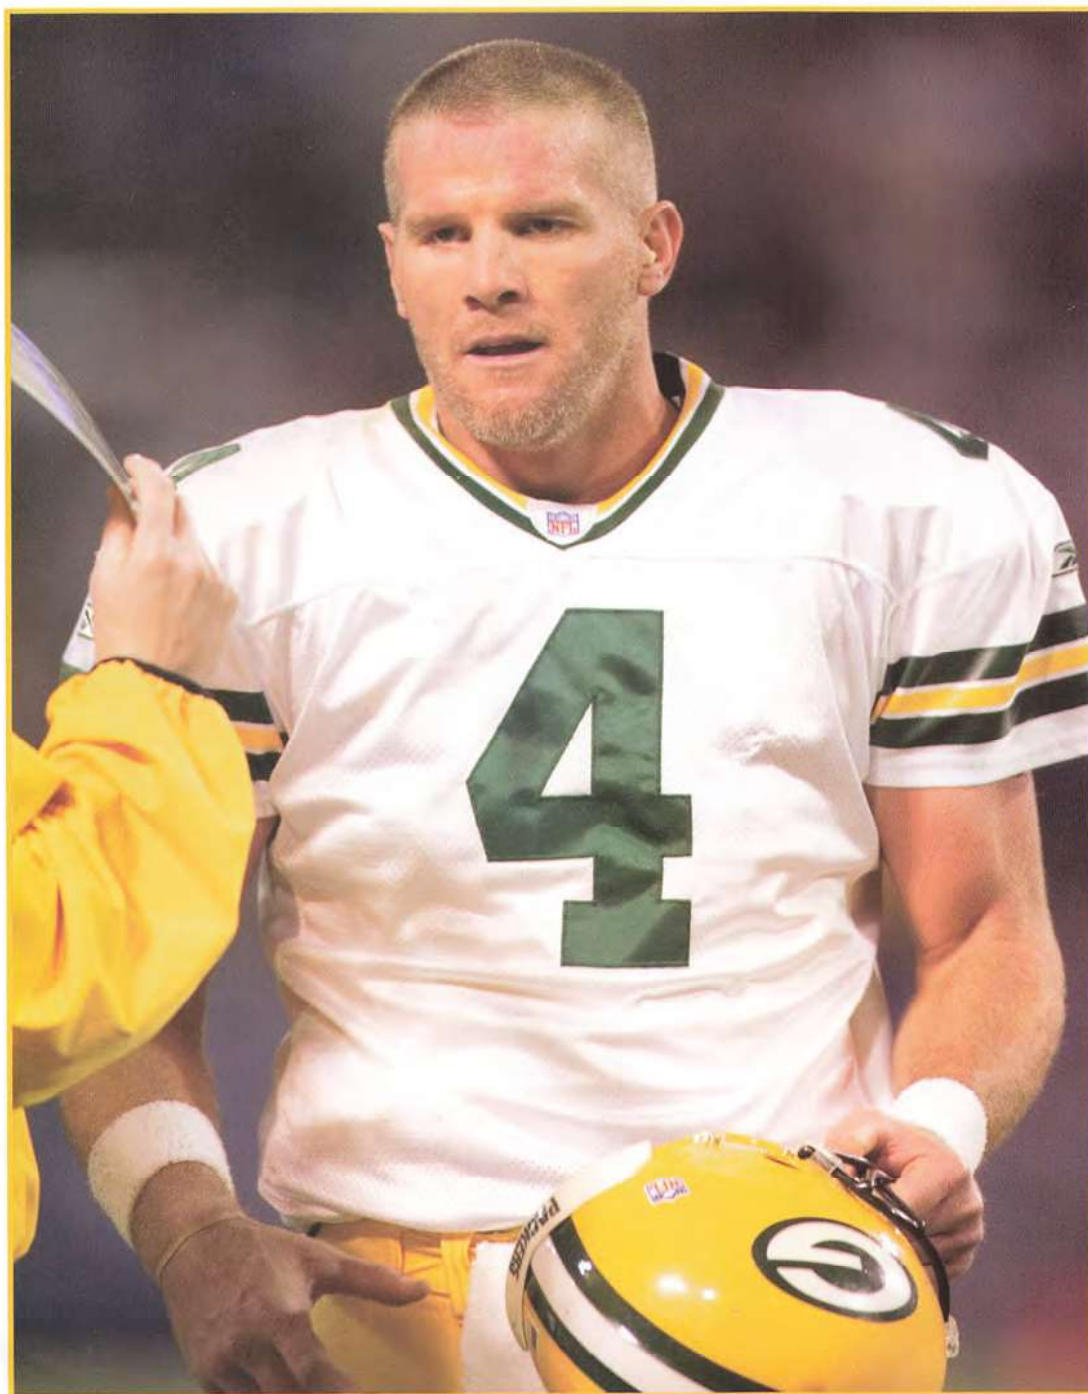

The fates smiled down upon Green Bay, however, as the Cardinals made a stirring comeback, winning the game 18-17 on a miracle TD on the games' final play. The play was shown on the video board back in Wisconsin and Lambeau Field went nuts as the Packers won the division with a 10-6 record.

In the playoffs, the Packers found themselves locked in a tight game with the Seattle Seahawks as the game went back and forth and was tied 27-27 at the end of regulation. In overtime, Al Harris was the hero, intercepting a pass from Matt Hasselbeck and returning in 52-yards for a game-winning touchdown. In the Divisional round the Packers got off to a fast start, leading the Philadelphia Eagles 14-0 at the end of the first quarter. Afterwards, the Packers offense stalled as the Eagles clawed their way back into the game, tying it at 14 in the fourth quarter.

The Packers responded and retook the lead at 17-14 on a Ryan Longwell field goal with 4:38 left. The Packers defense would have the Eagles in a hole, needing just one more stop on a fourth and 26. Sadly, the defense softened up for a moment allowing a miracle first down while the Eagles tied the game and forced overtime. In overtime Favre made an ill-advised pass which set up the Eagles for a chip shot game winning field goal, ending the Packers Super Bowl dreams with a heartbreaking 20-17 loss.

The Packers started the next season with a solid road win on Monday Night Football, beating the defending NFC champion Carolina Panthers and young quarterback Jake DelHomme 24-14. The opening day optimism was short lived, however, and the Packers struggled, losing their next 4 games, including three home games at Lambeau Field.

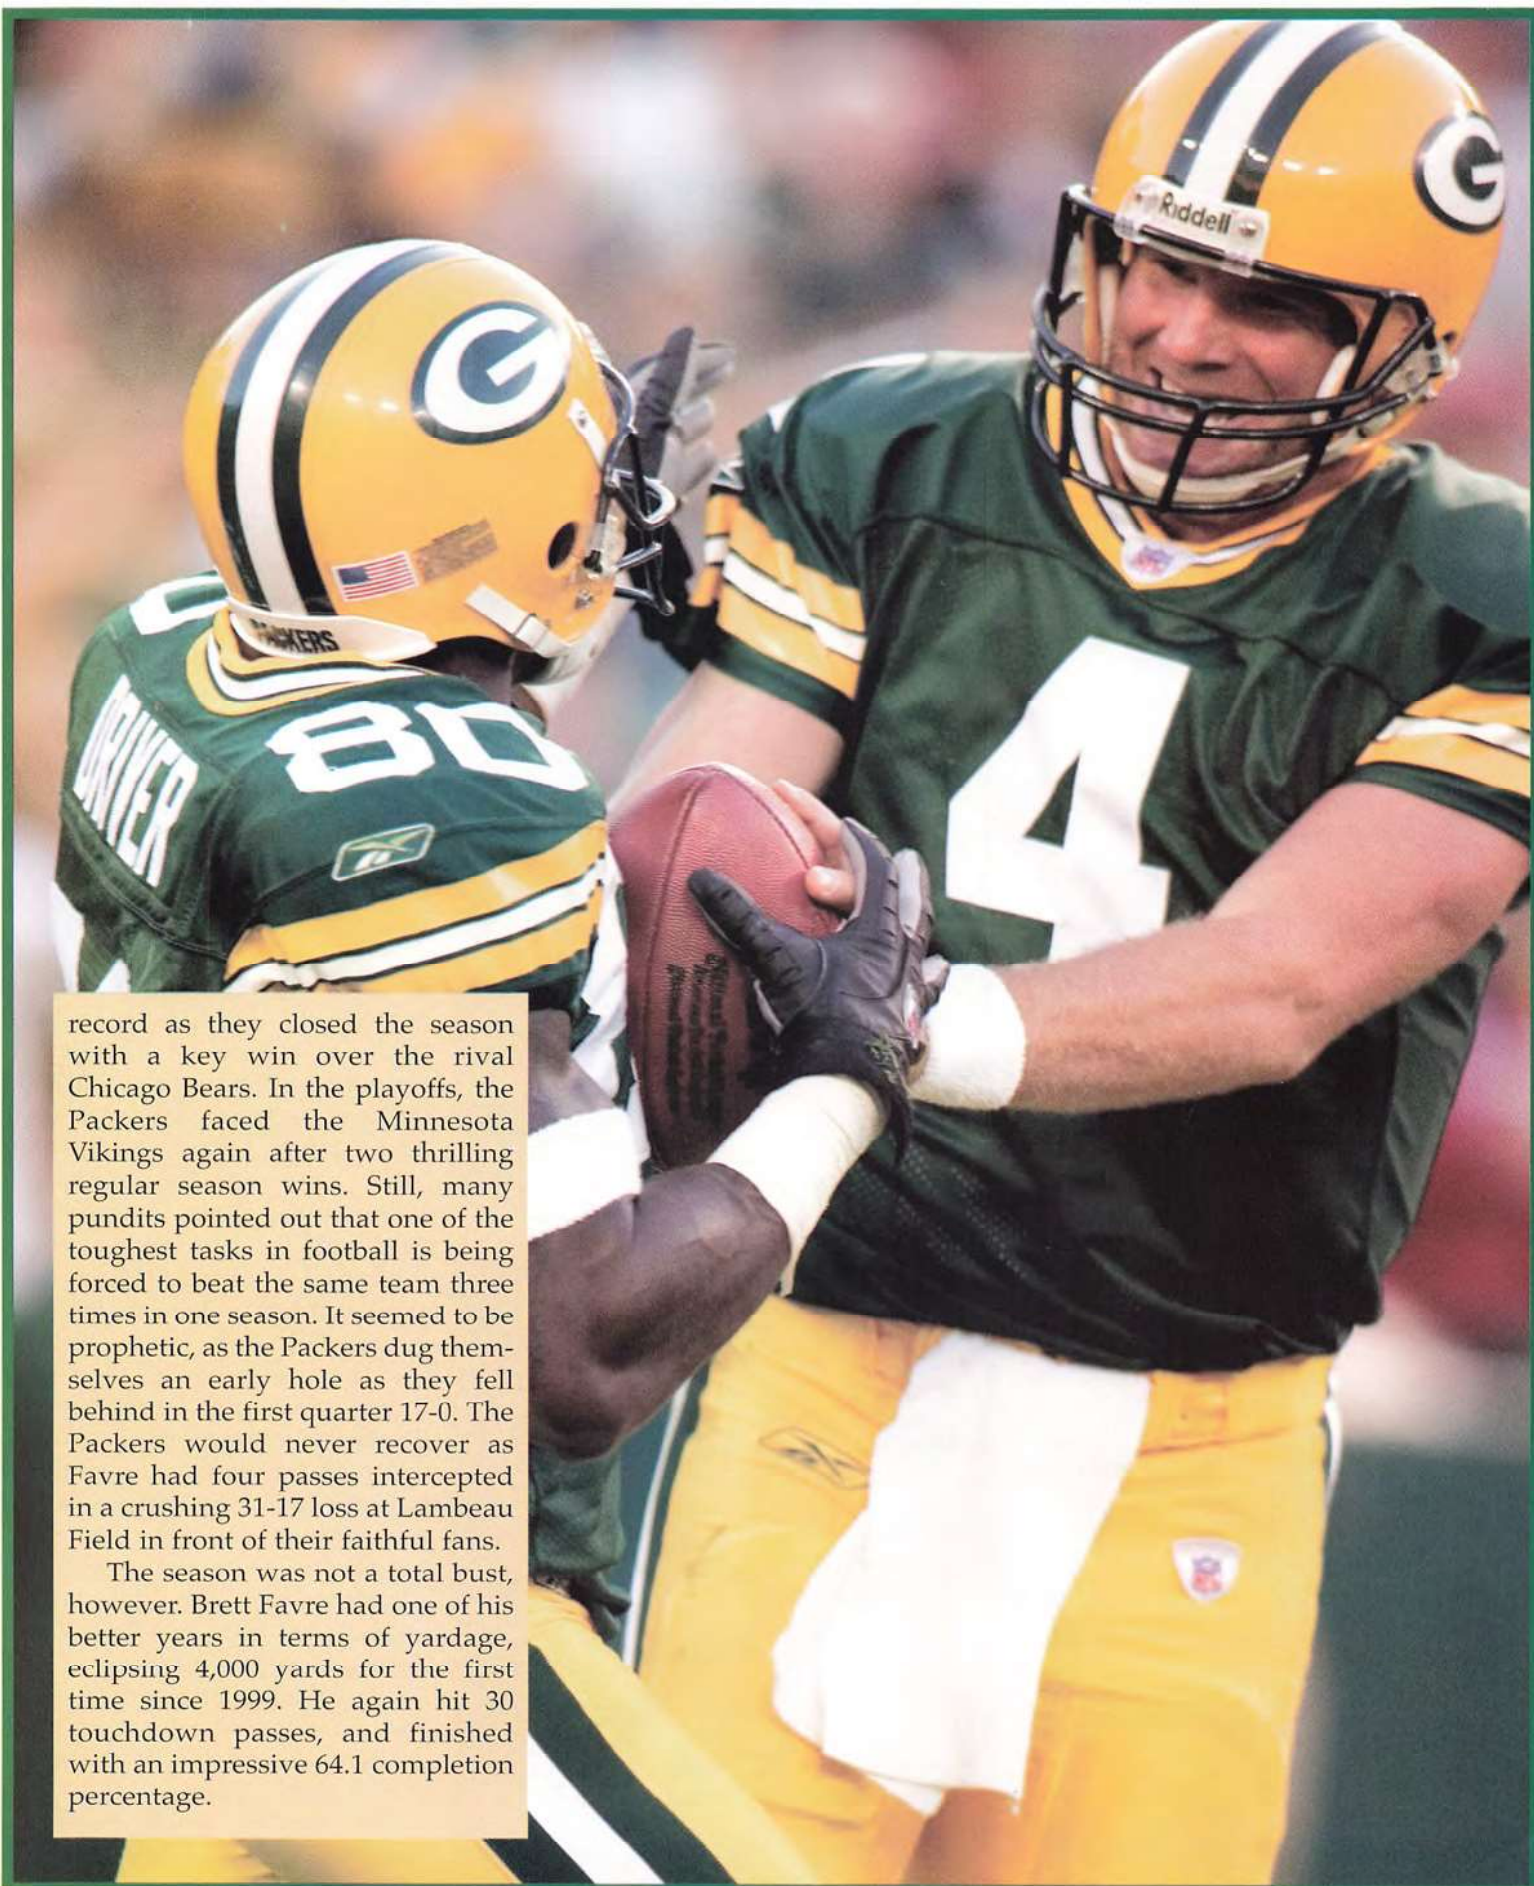

The Packers would end their losing streak in a big way, beating the Detroit Lions on the road 38-10 to move back to 2-4. The win in Detroit would be just the spark the Packers needed as they won their next 6 games, including a thrilling 34-31 win over the Minnesota Vikings on a Ryan Longwell 33-yard field goal as time expired. With the win, the Packers had marched back to claim the top spot in the NFC North.

After losing two of their next three games, the battle for the division championship came down to one game. It seemed a tall task, with the Packers facing the Vikings on the road in a nationally televised game on Christmas Eve. The game would go back and forth but Brett Favre passed for 365 yards and the Packers won again with some late game heroics by a score of 34-31 on Ryan Longwell's 29-yard field goal as time expired.

The Packers would go on to finish the season with a solid 10-6 record as they closed the season with a key win over the rival Chicago Bears. In the playoffs, the Packers faced the Minnesota Vikings again after two thrilling regular season wins. Still, many pundits pointed out that one of the toughest tasks in football is being forced to beat the same team three times in one season. It seemed to be prophetic, as the Packers dug themselves an early hole as they fell behind in the first quarter 17-0. The Packers would never recover as Favre had four passes intercepted in a crushing 31-17 loss at Lambeau Field in front of their faithful fans.

The season was not a total bust, however. Brett Favre had one of his better years in terms of yardage, eclipsing 4,000 yards for the first time since 1999. He again hit 30 touchdown passes, and finished with an impressive 64.1 completion percentage.

After their season ended with disappointing playoff losses the last four years, the Packers entered the 2005 season knowing the Brett Favre era was nearing its end. Even as the quarterback toiled along every week, the Packers knew that the time would soon be at hand to turn to the future. While Favre still had no plans for stepping back, the organization began to plan for the future by drafting quarterback Aaron Rodgers in the first round.

From the start of the season it was obvious that the Packers were in for a long season as wide receiver Javon Walker was injured and lost for the rest of the season in a Week One loss to the Detroit Lions. The home opener at Lambeau simply brought more frustration as the Packers comeback fell short in a 26-24 loss to the Cleveland Browns.

The struggles would continue the next two weeks as the Packers dropped to 0-4, with Favre increasingly becoming prone to mistakes from trying to do too much. In Week Five the Packers would take out all their early season frustrations on the New Orleans Saints, winning their first game of the season 52-3 as Favre led the way with three touchdown passes. It was, however, just a tiny oasis in a barren desert as the Packers lost their next three as the injuries mounted with both running back Ahman Green and backup Najeh Davenport being lost for the rest of the season.

At 1-7, the Packers did see the emergence of a new go-to running back as Samkon Gado had 103 yards rushing and two touchdowns in a 33-25 win on the road over the Atlanta Falcons. The Packers misery, though, would go on to last the remainder of the season as Brett Favre threw a career high 29 interceptions, and the Packers finished in last place with a terrible 4-12 record. The losing record was the first of the Favre era. Following the final loss of the season, it seemed as though the Favre era was coming to a close, with the quarterback himself openly wondering about retirement.

Following the season, head coach Mike Sherman was replaced by Mike McCarthy while Brett Favre spent the entire off-season contemplating retirement before ultimately deciding to return for another season. He announced his decision just four days before the NFL Draft, and he bounced back in a big way in 2006.

In 2006, Favre again started all 16 games, extending his consecutive-game streak to 237. By this point it was longest active streak in the NFL, third-longest in NFL history, and a record for quarterbacks.

Favre became the NFL's career leader in completions, with exactly 5,000 at the season's end. He extended to 16 seasons his NFL records of most seasons with 3,000 yards passing and most consecutive seasons with 3,000 yards passing. Favre also became only the second player in NFL history with 400 touchdown passes.

Favre finished the season with 413 and had Dan Marino firmly in his sights; Marino's record was 420.

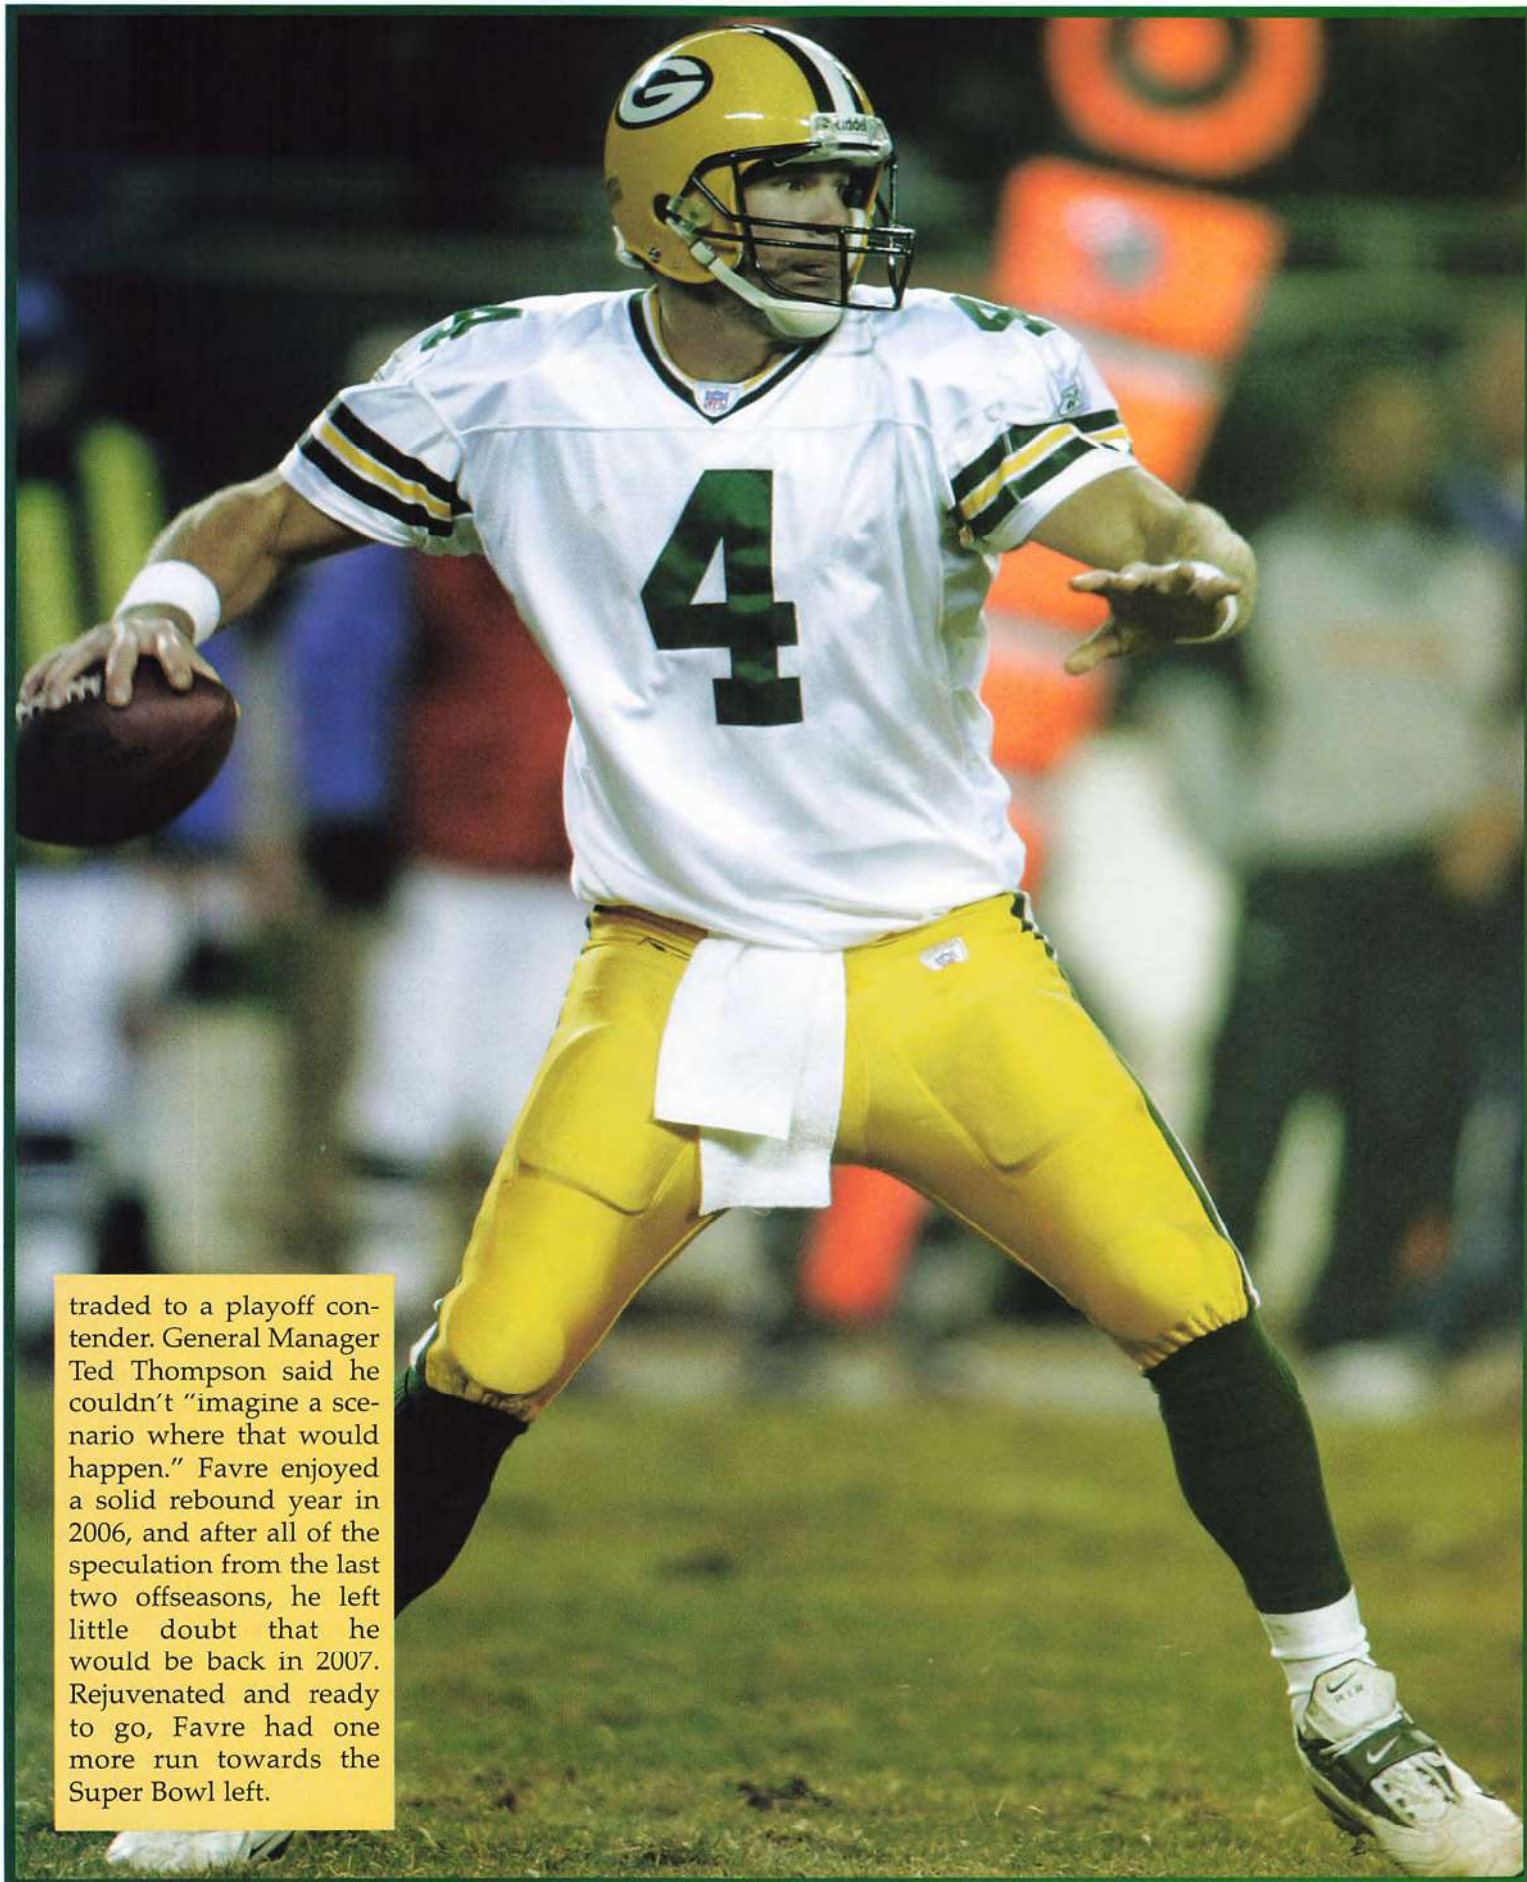

Favre additionally became only the second player in NFL history with 25,000 yards passing in a single stadium: Lambeau Field.

Favre's offseason had consisted of rampant speculation about whether or not he would play in 2006, with the drama carrying up to just days before the NFL Draft. He told HBO's Bob Costas just before the season he wouldn't rule out finishing his career with another team. A day after that news got out, Favre said he was "99.9 percent sure that won't happen." Favre also told Costas he decided to return after hearing former Giants quarterback Phil Simms' advice to "play as long as you can" on a radio show.

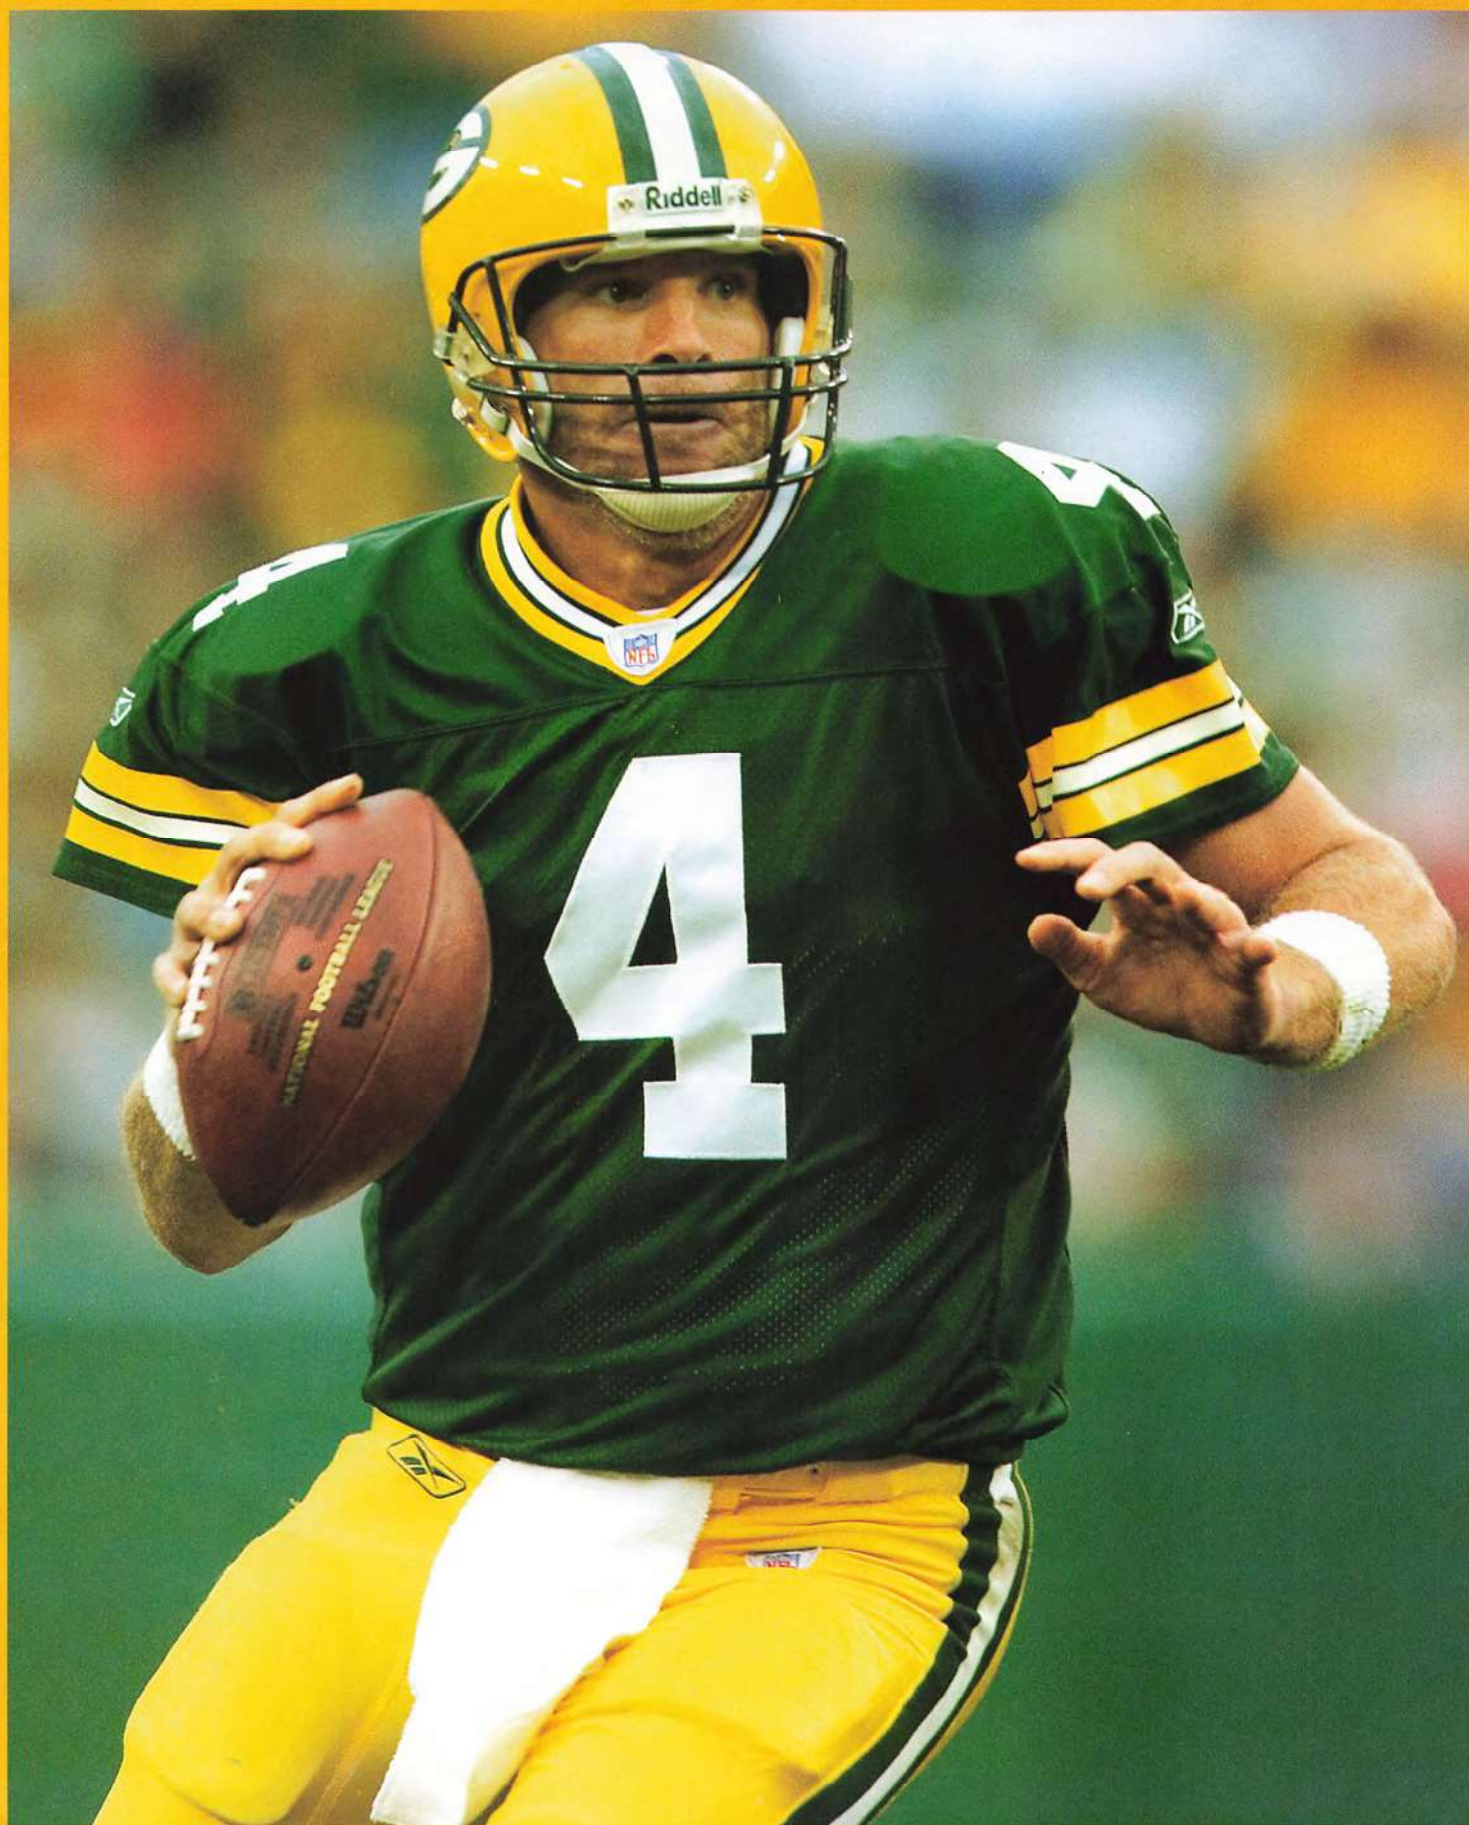

After the Packers started 0-2, Favre said he wouldn't want to be traded to a playoff contender. General Manager Ted Thompson said he couldn't "imagine a scenario where that would happen." Favre enjoyed a solid rebound year in 2006, and after all of the speculation from the last two offseasons, he left little doubt that he would be back in 2007. Rejuvenated and ready to go, Favre had one more run towards the Super Bowl left.

After minor surgery on his knee had removed bone spurs in February, Brett Favre was as healthy as ever heading to training camp before the 2007 season. Seemingly rejuvenated after 2006, Favre took to the field with a newfound vigor. With several NFL records in his sights, Favre readied to build his legend even more.

The 2007 season was a roll call of personal milestones. On September 16, 2007 Favre and the Packers defeated the New York Giants to give Favre his record setting 149th win, passing comeback king John Elway.

On September 30, Favre threw a 16-yard touchdown pass to Greg Jennings in the first quarter of the Packers game against the Vikings. This was his 421st NFL touchdown pass, and set a new all time record, surpassing Dan Marino's 420. Breaking this record received high praise from around the NFL, with congratulations coming from people such as NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell, former Packers head coach Mike Holmgren, and colleagues Steve Young and Joe Montana.

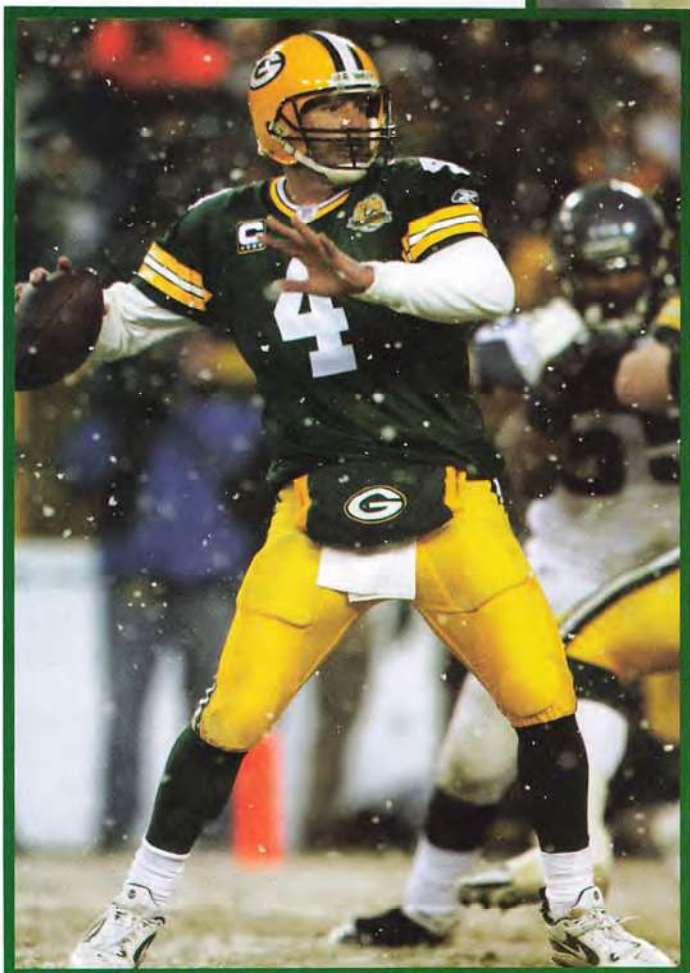

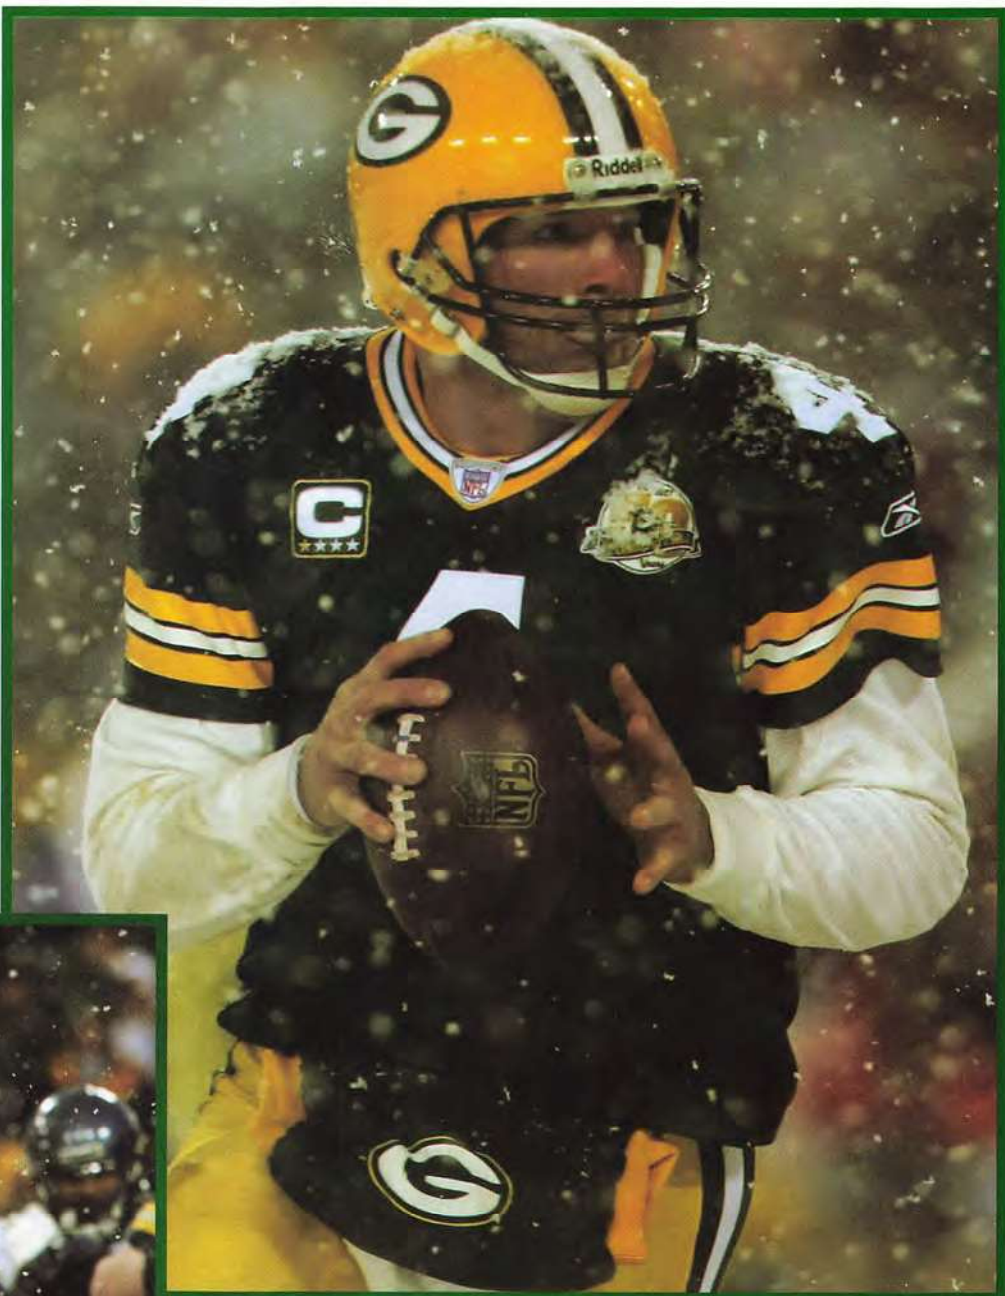

After the completion of touchdown 421, play was briefly stopped at the Metrodome in Minneapolis, and a message created by Dan Marino for Brett Favre was shown inside the stadium on the video boards.

While Favre had to be happy

with his personal accomplishments, the Packers were quickly rolling out to a commanding lead in the NFC Central. A team that had been written off as simply a team short on talent and with a quarterback hanging on to past glory was rising with each passing game.

On November 4, 2007, after Favre and the Packers defeated the Kansas City Chiefs 33-22, he became only the third quarterback to have defeated all thirty-one other current NFL teams. He joined Peyton Manning and Tom Brady as the only quarterbacks in NFL history to accomplish the feat; doing it just one week after the two of them achieved the same mark. On Thanksgiving Day 2007, Favre led the Packers to a 37-26 win over the Lions, carrying the team to a 10-1 overall record. He won the Galloping Gobbler award, given by the broadcasters at Fox to the game MVP. Favre threw three touchdown passes for his 63rd career game with at least three TDs, surpassing Marino's former record of 62.

Another of Marino's records fell on December 16th when Favre passed the Dolphins great to become the NFL's all-time leader in passing yards. Now well clear of the 61,000 yard mark, Favre owns nearly every possible passing record.

The Packers only lost three times in the regular season, once in a thriller with the Dallas Cowboys and their own young quarterback who has drawn comparisons to Favre in Tony Romo. The other losses have hit closer to home – an early season loss at Lambeau to the rival Chicago Bears and a pre-Christmas drubbing from the same Bears at cold and windy Soldier Field.

The 2007 season was a magical year for a man already heading to the Hall of Fame in Canton. Sadly, the year would end short of Arizona and the Super Bowl as the New York Giants punched their ticket to the big game by beating the Packers for the NFC title. Still, few observers predicted that the January contest would be his last.

YOU GO...
STILL OUR HERO

FAVRE FOREVER

After nearly two decades of leading the Green Bay Packers on and off the field, Brett Favre, the most visible man in the franchise, retired in a very reserved and private way. After public episodes had marked his decision to return over the last few seasons, the way he decided to walk away from the game was notably quiet by comparison.

There was no gaudy, tear-filled press conference, at least not for a few days. There was no ceremony at midfield for his final game. Most likely, there will be few, if any, interviews with the man himself about his decision to walk away from the game and city that have defined his life since 1992.

Instead of the tearful on-field goodbye or last-chance tours of duty, Favre decided to go out after one of his most memorable seasons. He first talked to his head coach, Mike McCarthy, and others in the Packers organization about his decision to step away. On Tuesday, he left a voicemail for ESPN's Chris Mortensen, making the news public.

"I know I can still play, but it's like I told my wife, I'm just tired mentally. I'm just tired," Favre said. There would be no cliffhanger this time, no

BRETT FAVRE

Packer fan speculation asking if he would return or retire. This was final, definite.

After the success of the 2007 season, including yet another NFC Central title and nearly every week marked by Favre breaking one of the game's all-time passing records, most observers expected Favre to return for at least one more go-around in 2008. Several of Favre's teammates expressed a surprise that their leader had decided to walk away, but McCarthy seemed less stunned.

The Packer coach commented that while he had been surprised with Favre's decision, the quarterback had been thinking about retirement for several days. McCarthy told Favre he had to follow his heart, and Favre turned to his wife for counsel. "If I felt like coming back — and Deanna and I talked about this — the only way for me to be successful would be to win a Super Bowl. To go to the Super Bowl and lose, would almost be worse than anything else," he said in his message to Mortensen."

Instead of shucking it out for at least one more year, Favre decided to ride off into the sunset. He made the decision by himself, with no one pressuring him one way or another. "I talked to Brett this morning and I told him, 'Nobody forced you to make this decision to retire, but the flip side is nobody encouraged you to play,'" commented his agent Bus Cook.

And with that, Brett Favre has retired. Favre held a press conference on the Thursday after his retirement became public knowledge, preparing himself for life after football. There will be no hobbled last grab for glory, like seeing Franco Harris in a Seahawks uniform or Jerry Rice as an Oakland Raider. Favre leaves the game as one of its all-time greatest players, one of its most notable ambassadors, and certainly as one of its most loved players.
